Fine Idea, Says Germany
Important Meetings
Four That Could Rule
One $710,000,000 Item

—By ARTHUR BRISBANE—

England, France, Italy, etc., decided not to pay the United States.

Germany says: "A good idea," and decides not to pay anybody, at least, not for six months. A six-months' "moratorium," meaning "no money to be paid."

You will hear "moaning at the bar," and a good deal of it, when Europe's professional defaulters find that they are to get from Germany a taste of their own medicine.

Few newspapers yesterday failed to print more pictures, more words, more guesses as to the winner, in connection with last night's heavyweight prizefight, Carnera-Baer, than were printed on any other subject.

We all love peace, decency. Even pugilistic assault and battery, with gate receipt accompaniment, is not always approved. But last night's meeting between two heavy, dull prizefighters interests more Americans than yesterday's meeting between Mussolini and Hitler. Newspapers know it, and act accordingly.

What Hitler and Mussolini said to each other will never be known, unless, as is probable, one or both write their memoirs, and tell about it. If Stalin and Kemal Pasha could have been at the meeting the real power of Europe would have been there, for among them the four could control any situation. Kemal is not the least important, for, holding Istanbul and the Dardanelles, he could open or close the gate of the Mediterranean to Russian power.

The Hitler-Mussolini meeting may prove to be important overwhelmingly. What do you consider up to now the meeting most important in its effect on the human race, excluding, of course, the meeting of Eve and the snake? That changed everything for all of us.

There have been dramatic meetings, as when Stanley met Livingston in the wilds of Africa; Columbus landed and met his first group of Indians, who little suspected what the white people would do to them; Ulysses crawled up out of the water to meet the beautiful Nausicaa; Satan, approaching the door of hell, met sin and death sitting on either side, etc. Millions of interesting meetings, not forgetting Orpheus and Eurydice in the lower regions, and the unfortunate Francesca, meeting her lover in hell, and, according to Dante, happy in spite of the heat, because she was going to be with him forever. Also, perhaps, because she knew her jealous husband was suffering, one floor lower down. But, which is the most important of all meetings to us human creatures of circumstances?

The meeting of Hitler and Mussolini reminds you that it is still possible, even in "effete Europe," for men to rise from low down to high up.

Mussolini ruling Italy is the son of a blacksmith, Hitler, absolute ruler of Germany, was a house painter who found it hard to make a living.

The national debt of the United States has risen to a "new high" for all time, namely to twenty-seven thousand million dollars, a debt twenty-seven times as big as it was before the big war started.

Wars are expensive, especially when with simple-hearted idiocy

Democratic Slate Shapes Up

ELY WARNS CURLEY TO 'BE GOOD'

Santosuosso Is Backed for Secretary of State at Parley

Convention Choices

FOR GOVERNOR
Gen. Charles H. Cole of Boston.
LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR
Mayor Joseph L. Hurley of Fall River.
FOR SECRETARY OF STATE
Dr. Joseph Santosuosso of Boston.
STATE TREASURER
Charles F. Hurley of Cambridge, incumbent.
STATE AUDITOR
Thomas H. Buckley of Abington.

BULLETIN

Convention Hall, Worcester, June 14—Nomination of Dr. Joseph Santosuosso of Boston today for secretary of state was the first upset in Ely-Walsh plans. Mrs. Mary di Pasquale Murray of Milford, for whom a wild demonstration was staged by women delegates, withdrew for the sake of harmony. Mae West got two votes from Suffolk County but lost them in a new poll of the district.

Then followed nomination of State Treasurer Charles F. Hurley by acclamation, the chair declaring him nominated unanimously despite hisses and boos. It was General Cole who moved for Hurley's nomination by acclamation.

Worcester, June 15—Split wide open, Massachusetts Democrats wrestled through their second day of the pre-primary convention today with former Mayor James M. Curley of Boston squaring away to fight the convention's landslide nomination of General Charles H. Cole for governor and with Governor Ely admonishing Curley to "stop kidding."

As the battle for other Democratic ticket places raged, this is the way the gubernatorial lines appeared to be drawn for the September primaries:

General Cole, opposed by former Mayor Curley and by Frank A. Goodwin, ousted chairman of the Boston Finance Commission, on the Democratic side.

ELY CAUTIONS CURLEY

Lieutenant Governor Gaspar G. Bacon, the Republican convention choice of a week ago, opposed by former Governor Alvan T. Fuller, now homeward bound from Europe, and Frank A. Goodwin, who will seek both nominations.

Not until the primaries are over and the people have had their say will the opponents in the November state election be known definitely.

To Curley's declaration, following his defeat in the convention,

Girl "Acts Funny," Slain by Brother

Piladelphia, June 15 (INS)—Because his 35-year-old sister, who had cared for him since boyhood, had been "acting very funny lately" Charles Schruger, 38-year-old deaf-mute, hammered the woman to death as she slept in her bed today, police said.

Police described the incident as a "mercy slaying."

Thorp Sobs as Hopes Fade Out

Concord, N. H., June 15—Sydney Thorp, condemned slayer of Joseph Trudeau, Portsmouth baker, sobbed heartbrokenly on his cot as his last hope for life slipped away today.

His only chance lies in an 11th hour action by Governor John G. Winant, who has already spent almost two days of mental struggle in a complete view of the case. As yet he has failed to act.

In the event he does not summon the council and recommend commutation or issue a reprieve, the law will exact its extreme penalty from Thorp a few minutes after midnight. He will be taken to the death house, where a new linen rope, recently purchased for $200, already awaits him.

HIS NERVE CRACKS

Thorp, whose usual calm in the face of doom has amazed prison officials, cracked completely today as his hope for life waned. Imperturbable until today, Thorp's mind turned to thoughts of death and he broke down. The spectre of the noose served to smash his reserve.

Giving up his almost year-long fight, he flung himself on his cot sobbing and apparently resigned to the fact that he would be the first person in New Hampshire to pay the death penalty since 1918.

Thorp's last vestige of hope practically disappeared at noon today. At that time Governor Winant told newspapermen there was nothing he could say about the case.

Informed that newspapermen were awaiting a statement from him, the governor summoned them to his office. Haggard and obviously worn out, he looked steadily at the group. After 18 hours

MRS. DALL IS ON WAY TO RENO HOME

President's Daughter's Divorce Is Seen in Trip to Nevada

By Associated Press

Reno, Nev., June 15—Mrs. Anna Curtis Dall, daughter of President Roosevelt, is establishing residence here and it was assumed divorce proceedings were in prospect.

Mrs. Dall has leased a home at Lake Tahoe.

SEPARATED A YEAR

The daughter of the President has been separated from her husband for more than a year.

With her two children, "Sistie" and "Buzzie," she lived at the White House during the past year.

Mrs. Dall was not available here today, but it was understood she was en route to this city.

Mr. and Mrs. Dall were married in June, 1926.

Mrs. Dall left Washington yesterday with her children.

Shortly after the Roosevelts entered the White House, Elliott Roosevelt, a son, left for the West Coast and was divorced from Elizabeth Donner Roosevelt, of Philadelphia.

A few days later, in Davenport, Ia., he was married to Miss Ruth Googins, of Fort Worth, Texas.

AUTO KILLS ACE TECH FLIER

Lieutenant Henry Brown Harris, 26, of Cambridge, veteran pilot with almost daily flights for the past five years to his credit, was killed instantly at the Elmira, N. Y., airport this morning in an automobile accident.

Lieutenant Harris was chief pilot for the Massachusetts Institute of Technology meteorological group, here to make observations preparatory to opening of the national glider meet.

Some of the men were practicing glider flights and Lieutenant Harris used his car to tow a glider, with James Kendrick of Glen Ellis, Ill., at the wheel.

They got the glider off the ground and its pilot cut loose. The automobile was swerved so its occupants might view the flight. A left rear wheel collapsed and the car rolled over.

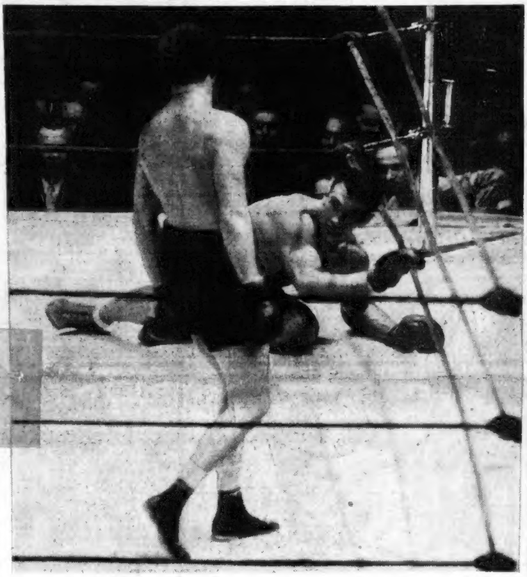
Lieut. Harris was pinned under the wreck, his neck broken and he died instantly. Kendrick received a broken shoulder and several fractured ribs.

Mrs. Francis Harris, mother of the dead pilot, saw her son killed.

Railway Pension Bill Is Passed

Washington, June 15 (AP)—The Crosser bill, to provide pensions for railway employes, was passed today by the House. The measure was sent to a conference committee to adjust differences between that and a similar bill passed by the Senate.

Looks Like It's Under Ropes and Out



It looks very much as though Primo Carnera had taken enough in this picture and he was toying with the idea of crawling under the ropes to get away from those Max Baer punches. This scene was snapped in the 11th round. His nose is bleeding, his mouth is agape and he appears to be in a daze over the whole business. (Picture from International News Photograph Service.) CONWAY LAUDS NEW CHAMP

By JACK CONWAY
Sports Editor, Boston Evening American

New York, June 15—Hail, the new champion! Max Baer of California, brought the world's heavyweight title back to the United States when he knocked out Primo Carnera in 11 rounds before 50,000 persons at the Garden Bowl on Long Island.

Baer subjected Carnera to the most decisive licking a heavyweight has received since Jack Dempsey crushed Jess Willard at Toledo.

Baer's mighty right hand beat Carnera to the canvas. The slugging Californian scored ten knockdowns before Carnera asked Referee Arthur Donovan to stop the contest in the eleventh round.

Carnera was helpless when he appealed to the referee to stop the uneven tussle. He had been beaten to a human pulp by Baer's terrific punches.

Big Bout a 'Barroom Fight,' Says Brisbane

By ARTHUR BRISBANE

(Copyright, 1934, by Universal Service, Inc.)

Madison Square Bowl, Long Island City, N. Y., June 15—About 55,000 fight watchers are sitting, in a shallow, circular bowl around a brilliantly lighted ring.

The two big ones are making their way through the crowd. Carnera arrives before Baer. Little applause for him, although he is world champion. In New York's population foreign champions are not popular. Baer will be here soon. Perhaps he will be a little "cagey" and let Carnera wait, hoping to irritate his nervous system. Huge creature, Carnera, but he does not look as well as he did at Miami, when he last appeared in public.

Here comes Baer, much warmer greeting for him than for Carnera. He wears a yellow wrapper, with "Steve Morgan" printed on the back. That gown he wore as a sailor in the Navy, in moving pictures.

One minute of sparring, a hard blow and down goes Carnera. Much distressed. Round ends. Second round begins "like a barroom

FATHER OF 5 VICTIM IN HARBOR PLUNGE

Car and Body Fished Out; Broken Windows Bare Fight to Escape

Eugene B. O'Neil, 34, of Pearl street, South Braintree, father of five children, was drowned today at Boston Fish Pier when his automobile bumped over the pier caplog and plunged into 30 feet of water.

The body was recovered by police with grappling irons an hour and a half after the accident.

CAR FISHED OUT

Half an hour before, the cabriolet type of automobile, owned by the Irving Usen Co., fish dealers of Northern avenue, by whom O'Neil was employed, had been pulled out of the water with a fire department crane.

All windows in the closed car were seen to be shattered, an evidence of the battle O'Neil had put up to escape his trap.

The cause of the accident is a mystery. Only two fishermen are known to have seen the plunge of the car.

PLUNGES OFF

They told police that the machine rolled down the pier toward the northeast corner, started to turn in front of the New England Fish Exchange building and then suddenly plunged forward, as if the driver's foot had pressed down sharply on the accelerator.

Over the caplog, more than a foot above the floor of the pier, the cabriolet bumped and then toppled, nose first, into the harbor.

Alarmed by the fishermen's cries for aid, Fish Pier workers rushed out of shops and offices and boats to where the car had vanished.

Police and the fire department were notified and rescue crews were rushed to the pier. A 40-foot ladder was run down into the water and a fireman, standing in water up to his shoulders, prodded beneath the surface in an attempt to locate the submerged car.

When the police boat and fire boat arrived, other soundings were made and the car was located. The car was brought up and was found to be empty.

Dragging was then begun and the body was located 30 feet out from the pier.

Radio Warns of Poison

By Associated Press

Providence, R. I., June 15—Police here radioed all patrol cars this forenoon to find a New Jersey sedan, registration LE-43507, owned by Arnold Schenken, 25 Oakwood avenue, Glenridge, N. J., and warn a woman in the car that a medicine she obtained on prescription may contain deadly poison. The car is believed to be on its way from this city to Cape Cod.

According to information here, the medicine was made up in Chicago. When the woman wrote a Glenridge physician about it from Boston, he recognized an apparent mistake, and sent word here that the medicine contained poison.

Fire Fumes Oust Everett Families

Francis Pettit, and his seven-year-old son, were affected by smoke today, when fire broke out in the three-story building in Main street, Everett, in which they make their home. Damage was estimated at $1500. Investigation into the cause of the blaze is being made.

The family of Edward Curillo on the third floor made their way to safety unassisted.

DREAMS AND SPIRITS GIVE CLUES IN LOWELL DEATH SEARCH

SPIRITUALIST SUPPLIES 'TIP' TO POLICE HUNTERS

Mystery Woman in Vermont to Be Quizzed as Detectives Plan to Raze Caouette House for Gun

Lowell, June 15—Spiritualism and dream clues entered today into the search for the gun-slayers of Paul Caouette and his pretty wife, Alice, as three officers, on another angle, hurried to Bennington, Vt., to question a mystery woman.

With exactly a week having passed since the double slaying, the most brutal in Lowell's history, and with solution apparently no nearer than ever, a woman walked into Lowell police headquarters today.

She said her name was Maria Ghiloogilly, that she was interested in spiritualism, and that in a dream last night, spirits gave her clues in the murders which she thought might aid police.

SURPRISE FOR REPORTERS

Lieutenant Inspector Patrick J. Frawley talked with her privately and then, much to the newspapermen's surprise, announced that there might be something to the information, and hurriedly left headquarters.

Half an hour before this, State Detectives Edward Sherlock and Edward O'Neill, had departed headquarters, with Police Inspectors William Nelson and John Graham, the last three bound on some mission they would not disclose.

SOLVED MAIL ROBBERY

Sherlock said, however, that he was going to Hudson, N. H., to confer with Captain David Petrie, retired head of the Lowell Bureau of Criminal Investigation, who made a record for himself as a crime detector during the years he headed the bureau.

Two years ago Captain Petrie solved the $100,000 mail robbery in Lowell, and Detective Sherlock said he hoped to get from him some "important leads."

The mystery woman in Vermont will be questioned, it is understood, in connection with the story told police on Tuesday, by a North Chelmsford resident.

Meanwhile, Deputy Superintendent Michael Winn and a squad of 15 officers went to the Caouette farm today to search the buildings thoroughly in a hunt for the death gun.

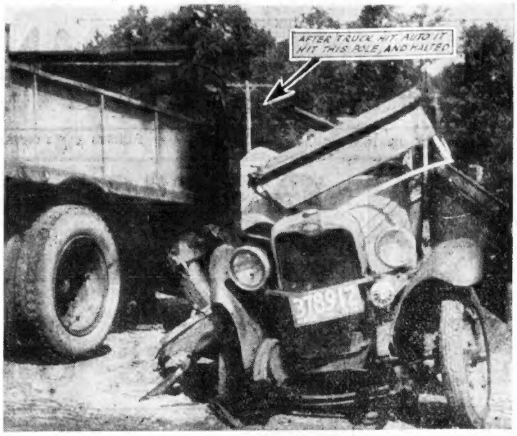
PARTITIONS RIPPED

Partitions of buildings will be ripped open. Particular attention will be paid, police said, to a new ell, which Caouette was building himself.

Investigators have also returned to the tramp theory, which they practically eliminated early this week. Two officers have been sent to Hudson, N. H., in a renewed search for the mysterious vagrant, who seemed to have knowledge of the slayings three hours before discovery of the bodies.

Police have received reports of his presence on New Hampshire roads.

Post Stops Truck in Wild Ride of Death



Death rode beside the driver of this big truck in Woburn early today. The truck smashed into an automobile driven by Kenneth Merrifield of Holliston, completely demolishing the lighter machine and leaving the driver dead at the roadside. The truck's wild rampage was then halted by a telephone post. (Picture by Boston American Staff Photographer.)

U.S. Doctor Shot Dead In China

By Associated Press

Peiping, China, June 15—The United States legation made swift representations to Chinese authorities for the slaying early today of Dr. J. H. Ingram, 75-year-old American missionary, as he attempted to shield his wife and grandchildren from bandits.

Dr. Ingram was shot to death in his summer bungalow on the outskirts of Peiping, before the eyes of his horror-stricken family. A veteran of the Boxer siege, he had been in China 50 years. A native of Ohio, he was attached to the American Board of Missions with headquarters at Boston.

Chinese officials promised to capture the outlaws and to protect other foreigners.

Plymouth Police 'Chase' Dillinger

Plymouth, June 15—Chief of Police Dearborn and a squad of officers had a useless chase here on a tip from a citizen he had seen the widely hunted John Dillinger, Public Enemy No. 1, near Clear pond. The tip was found to be without any foundation.

MUSSOLINI AND HITLER WARN EACH OTHER

Steel Gleams in Salutes as Nazi Chief and Mussolini Prepare to Resume Peace Talks Today

(Copyright, 1934, by International News Service)

Venice, June 15—One thousand daggers flashed under Adolf Hitler's nose today. Nazi bombs burst in Austria.

The bombs were Hitler's reminder to Benito Mussolini that he had better make peace with Germany about Austria.

Fascist daggers gleam at Hitler. They are Mussolini's reminder to Hitler that he had better make peace with Italy about Austria.

The daggers gleamed in formal greetings to honored guests. They were in the hands of Mussolini's Arditi shock troops of Fascist militia. As they marched past the dictators in Saint Mark's square, the Arditi, giving their traditional dagger salute, sent shivers down the spines of spectators. It was at least as much of a menace as it was a greeting.

Mussolini used the occasion again to show Hitler an example of Italy's military strength. The regular army took no part, but 20,000 Fascist armed with every light weapon, from daggers to machine guns, marched past the German leader.

Serious conversations come after lunch together at the Golf Club at Lido.

Lew Cody Estate Fixed at $48,029

Los Angeles, June 15—Special letters of administration in the estate of Lew Cody, movie actor, who died May 31, were granted by the Superior Court to Cody's half-sister, 14-year-old Cecile Lena Cote of Berlin, N. H.

The value of the estate was placed in the petition at $48,029. Miss Cote came here from New Hampshire with her mother, Mrs. Lena T. Cote.

Polish Minister Shot

Warsaw, June 15 (INS)—Col. Bronislaw Pieracki, Polish minister of the interior, is reported to have been shot, probably fatally today by an unidentified man.

HANFSTAENGL IS ACCUSED AGAIN

With the express liner Europa rapidly nearing Ambrose lightship with Ernst F. S. Hanfstaengl, Harvard '09, aboard, he became the center of a letter-writing storm that today threatened to obscure almost every other feature of Harvard's commencement festivities.

In a letter to the Harvard Crimson, Major Frank Pease of 551 Fifth avenue, New York, declared that his wife, the former Miss M F. Abbott, Radcliffe '09, a cousin of President Emeritus Abbott Lawrence Lowell of Harvard, would remain away from her own 25th class reunion in Cambridge if the Hitler lieutenant is permitted to join his class in the Yard.

Pease accused the Nazi foreign publicity chief of laughing at his wife and referring to her as a "dirty American" in Berlin's Amerika Institut when she appeared there to protest against being dragged from her hotel in a night gown and beaten in an attempt to obtain from her certain securities that she was assumed to have.

She was held incommunicado in a cold prison cell for 28 hours, her husband said, and submitted to such indignities that she contracted pleurisy and almost died later in Brussels.

Numerous other charges are made against Hanfstaengl and the Nazis, and the letter is concluded with a promise that a newly-organized secret organization will see to it that the Nazis never succeed in their alleged aim of spreading their views in this country. The Crimson editors did not publish the letter.

WOBURN CRASH KILLS MAN

Kenneth Merrifield, 23, of Woodlawn street, Holliston, was instantly killed today, when his automobile was demolished in a collision with a truck at Salem and Cedar streets, Woburn.

David Roberts, 22, also of Woodlawn street, Holliston, who was was driving Merrifield's car at the time of the crash, suffered minor injuries.

Louis Amicone of Oakland street, Malden, owner and driver of the truck, was unhurt. He and Roberts were arrested on charges of manslaughter and operating so as to endanger.

Steel in Eye Moves; Magnet Gives Hope

Optimism was expressed today by surgeons at the Massachusetts Eye and Ear Infirmary that the sight of the eye of Charles L. Knight, Jr., 23, 64 Stratford road, West Roxbury, would be saved.

Dr. Charles L. Knight, surgeon at the hospital and father of the youthful canoe paddling champion, said that the use of a powerful magnet, had apparently been able to move slightly the minute piece of steel imbedded in the patient's eye.

RING FEUD SETTLED SAY GILLESPIES, PLANNING TRIP ABROAD

en's Folks Ready to Sail for Europe and Drop Fight

That Astor-Gillespie ring feud is all washed up. The parents of the vivacious Eileen G., ex-fiancee of John Jacob, won't expose the Astor scion's throbbing heart to the world via certain mysterious correspondence.

As a matter of fact, the Gillispies are going to leave New York. They may even embark for Europe. And they don't intend to make public the apology which they say was given to them by young Astor in exchange for the return of J. J.'s $70,000 engagement ring.

In an exclusive interview in New York, with an "official spokesman" of the Gillespie clan, the Boston Evening American learned positively that Astor's letters won't be published. The spokesman said:

"Mr. and Mrs. Gillespie have Mr. Astor's signed apology. I do not see how any benefit could be derived from further action. The family is quite satisfied."

The spokesman was asked whether young Astor's reference to the story of the apology as "bluff" and "[illegible]" did not put it squarely up to the Gillespies to spread the supposed correspondence on the record.

"No, it doesn't," the Gillespie mouthpiece said emphatically. "The original statement given out said that these letters would be published at the discretion of the family. Read the statement carefully and you'll see that this is so."

At Newport the loss of her pet black Cairn terrier today took the mind of Miss Ellen Tuck French, fiancee of young Astor, completely off tennis, which she declared she was going to take up seriously in place of dancing parties.

The dog, which was found by the French family in the country last October, has been claimed by its former owner, Fred Christianson, of Newport. There was no question of his ownership, and after a half-hour conference Christianson walked off with the animal.

Miss French, who made an unsuccessful offer to purchase the dog, seemed quite affected by the loss of the animal. She had no further thoughts for tennis.

She had declared she would devote herself to this sport because she thought it more fun. She revealed many debs had become cool toward her last year when she monopolized the stag line at parties.

GIRL, 3, WEEPS FOR MOTHER SHE 'LOST'

Officials Say Woman Deserted Baby in North Station

"Mama, Mama," was the insistent and pitiful plea of a sweet, blue-eyed little three-year-old girl at the Chardon Street Home today as she yearned in vain for the fond caresses of the mother who had abandoned her in the North Station.

Officials today are searching for Mrs. Frances Naramore, Belfast, Me., said to be the mother of the child, who sought help of the Travelers' Aid at the North Station.

COMB GREENFIELD

Travelers' Aid authorities said that the child found abandoned was with Mrs. Naramore when she applied for assistance to get to Greenfield at the North Station Aid office.

Today, agents of the Travelers' Aid office said, measures had been taken to locate the mother of the little girl at Greenfield, Mass. where, the mother told agents, she had a job.

Police investigation today showed that the mother and child stopped at a Myrtle street lodging house to which they were sent by the society. Later, police found, the mother returned to the North Station, collected her baggage, and abandoned her baby girl.

GIRL TO BE QUIZZED

Greenfield police today sought information from Miss Jeanette Nash, 260 Conway street, who, Mrs. Naramore told Aid agents, was going to help her in finding a job.

No trace of the mother had been obtained by police today. Her description was given as: Five feet three inches tall, 22 years old, weight 120 pounds, light complexion, blue eyes, brown hair, wore dark coat.

Phone Girls to Teach Police

The next time that you have converse with a policeman, it is more likely that you will hear "the voice with a smile." And if the talk runs into big figures, you will hear the patrolman saying "ni-yum," instead of just plain "nine."

Commissioner Hultman today decreed that all men, who are to handle telephones in the new Bureau of Communications, must go to the telephone exchange at 8 Harrison avenue, and familiarize themselves with telephone equipment and methods.

The first three officers assigned to take the training course are Patrolmen James Ahearn, Norman Mortimer and Theodore McCormick.

The bride in the surprise wedding, Miss Elizabeth Schulten, 1000 Park avenue, gave her age as 23 on the marriage license application. Loree said he was 21.

MRS. DAHL IS TO GET DIVORCE

Curtis B. Dall at the Roosevelts' Hyde Park home.

The first news of their marital rift was in January, when the social register's "dilatory domiciles" pamphlet listed separate addresses for the two.

DALL NOT AT WHITE HOUSE

Dall's address was listed as Panache, an estate in North Tarrytown, N. Y. Mrs. Dall's address was given as the White House.

Previously it was noted that Dall was not a visitor at the White House.

A three months' trip to Europe was the Dalls' wedding trip.

On their return, Dall was made a general partner of an investment banking firm, in charge of its New York office.

In December of 1932 he announced that he would become an independent commission broker.

Washington, June 15 (AP)—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, questioned at a press conference today concerning reported plans of Mrs. Anna Curtis Dall to obtain a divorce, said she had no comment other than her daughter had gone to Nevada with her two children.

Mrs. Roosevelt said that when Mrs. Dall left she was not even certain at what town she would stop.

New York, June 15 (AP)—Curtis B. Dall today said he had no comment to make on the establishment of a residence in Reno, Nev., by his wife, Mrs. Anna Curtis Dall, daughter of President Roosevelt.

Dall was seen as he was going down in an elevator from his offices in the financial district.

Informed of Reno dispatches, Dall said he had "no comment." Then he asked:

"Did you seen the prize fight last night?"

Before an answer to his question could be given, Dall said "I'm very busy, very busy," stepped out of the elevator and hurried away.

GIRL, 5, KILLED BY OIL TRUCK

Struck by an oil truck on her way to school today, Virginia Lee, 5-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William J. Lee, of Cushing street, Wollaston, was pronounced dead on admission to Quincy City Hospital.

The girl, who is a pupil of the Massachusetts Field School in Wollaston, is said to have ran in front of the truck at Hancock and Willett streets. The front wheel passed over her head.

George W. Brown, of Park road, South Weymouth, driver of the truck, told the police that he did not see the child until she darted out from the curb.

AUTOPSY OPENS ON GIRL DEATH

Tests in laboratories aa Harvard medical school were started today on the brain of seven-year-old Norma Brewer of Lynn, whose death from a dog bite brought criticism upon two Lynn doctors and state police.

The Brewer girl, only child of Mr and Mrs. Merle G. Brewer of Marion street, Lynn, died of hydrophobia as the result of a bite inflicted by a Spitz dog in Middleton, according to Dr. James A. Dumas, Lynn health commissioner.

Two doctors, who treated the girl, were severely criticized by Dr. Dumas for alleged failure to report the case for Pasteur treatment.

Slayer Thorp's Hope Fades as Gallows Near

devoted to review of the case yesterday, the governor returned to his office to spend two more hours in his efforts to find some doubt which might lead to commutation.

He showed the strain. His personal opposition to capital punishment has conflicted with his desire to uphold his sworn duty. He was tired but his voice was steady as he said:

"Boys, there is nothing I can say regarding the case."

A veritable barrage of questions was flung at him. He held up his hand for silence, shook his head and repeated his statement.

"I can't say anything now. Don't ask me any questions."

In reply to a question as to whether any statement could be expected, the governor replied that he planned to be at the State House for the rest of the afternoon working on the matter.

"NO NEED TO WAIT"

"There is no need of you waiting around here," he said. "And if I decide to do anything I will let you know. I will call you all here and you can rest assured you will be the first to hear anything I may have to say."

He then signified the interview was ended, and returned to his feverish study of the case.

While the governor was delivering his ominous message, Thorp was rapidly nearing a complete breakdown in his cell.

His first sign of cracking appeared this morning shortly after he arose. He asked for news and was told nothing had been heard from the governor. He appeared dejected and at breakfast had no appetite. His complete breakdown came this noon after a visit by his counsel, Stewart Rowe.

Rowe informed him of his visit to the governor with new evidence he said had been secured in Portsmouth. He said the governor gave no indication that he would recommend commutation.

He told him there was still a chance and urged him to keep up his courage. Thorp burst into tears, seized Rowe's arm and sobbed:

"I don't think there's any use."

Rowe comforted him, and left a short time later, after assuring him he would do everything possible for him. Thorp was disconsolate and flung himself on his cot, sobbing bitterly. Jail officials said he seemed on the verge of collapse. Fear was expressed that he would collapse this afternoon.

Just before he heard the news, Thorp had eaten his noonday meal. He had broiled haddock, potatoes and coffee and then asked for dropped eggs on toast. He refused dessert.

FORCED SELF TO EAT

Jail officials noticing his heavy eating believed he had regained the iron composure which he seemed to be losing this morning. At breakfast he had told Warden George Clark that he did not wish to eat.

"I'm forcing myself ot do this," he said. "I guess I'll have to if I want to keep up my strength."

He was morose and moody all morning but his eating this noon brought the hope he had recovered. But the visit of his attorney seemed to unnerve him completely, officials said.

As he wept on his cot, two prison guards stood outside his cell door. They were the historic death watch, which New Hampshire sets over its condemned men during the 24 hours preceding their death.

Efforts to console him were useless, as he was convinced that his doom was sealed.

Prison officials said the condemned man would be removed to a secret section of the prison sometime between 3 and 4 p. m. today, and would there await the final walk to the scaffold. His only possible chance now lies in the vague hope Governor Winant may be convinced by some development his life should be spared.

The Governor was feverishly searching for that development. Faced on one side with his personal opposition to the death penalty and the plea of Thorp's aged mother that she be allowed to forfeit her life in his place,, and, on the other, by the demand of the slain man's daughter, for an "eye for an eye," and his realization that he is sworn to uphold the State's laws, the State executive is in a desperate quandary.

GALLOWS IS READY

The scaffold has been prepared for the past two days. The death house has been locked, and the shades drawn, so prying eyes may not peer in the windows. Ordinarily it is used as a storeroom, but now its grisly purpose will be to snuff out the first life for the State since 1918.

The special linen-silk rope has been strung through a ring bolt in the ceiling, and hangs down to a trap door level with the floor.

Plans for the execution call for Thorp to step through the door of the deathhouse a few minutes after midnight. He will be accompanied on his last walk by a clergyman, the Rev. Franklin C. Thompson, pastor of the West Congregational Church, and several deputies.

Entering the death house, he will have the black hood placed over his head by one deputy while others will tie his hands.

Pointing to the metal imperishable of his predecessor, which hangs on the wall of his office, Mayor Mansfield said:

"I suppose it's about time that was moved. We'll replace it with the painting. I see he was obliterated yesterday at Worcester."

Safe Back in Mother's Arms

When Nancy Shaw, 1½ years old, woke in her crib shortly after 2 o'clock this morning, she felt restless. So clad in her birthday suit she crawled out into the dark street, where a passing autoist saw her little naked body in the headlight glare and turned her over to the police, who found her parents asleep in their Fearless street, Lynn, home. Now Nancy is being held tight by her mother, Mrs. Dorothy Shaw. (Picture by Boston Evening American Staff Photographer.)

Three hours after midnight . . . a child crept slowly to the middle of the pavement before the house in which she lives in Fearless street, Lynn. Several early morning cars had whizzed by in the darkness . . . their drivers missing the baby by inches. A screech of brakes . . .

Chester Moy, also a resident of Fearless street, slams on his brakes. He has seen the baby in the middle of the road. His front wheels stop barely ten feet from the creeping infant.

No clothes on this baby . . . only her birthday suit. Moy carries the child into his home and calls police. A checkup of the neighborhood, the fearless child of Fearless street is Nancy I. Shaw, 2½ years, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Eric Shaw, who were asleep when she crept out through a back door.

BUSY BRITISH COAL MINES PROVE PROSPERITY

Revived British Industry is bringing renewed activity in the British coal mines—a sure sign of recovery, H. R. Knickerbocker writes in the fifth chapter of his series on British recovery. "But the irony of the British coal industry," Knickerbocker writes, "is that the healthier it becomes the fewer men it employs." This, he explains, is due to the increasing use of machines in the mines.

By H. R. KNICKERBOCKER

International News Service Staff Correspondent

Newcastle-on-Tyne, June 15—Six hundred years ago they mined coal in Newcastle. They mined it in little holes like primitive water wells, and when one hole became too deep they started another one. Today Newcastle miners go down underground a quarter of a mile, then turn seaward and burrow along two miles out under the ocean producing the stuff that runs England's factories, the fuel for British recovery.

Soon they will have burrowed out beyond the three-mile limit and then they will not have to pay royalties to the crown. Modern mining in this district today is a far cry from the days when Elizabethans coined the phrase about carrying coals to Newcastle.

Oil may come, and waterpower may come, but coal remains the principal fuel of Britain. Coal is nevertheless the stepchild of British industry. It has only one rival for its miserable condition. The rival is cotton textiles.

But coal still employs more men in Britain than any other industry. It still has the largest number of unemployed men. Today British coal is recovering, slowly, painfully, but recovering.

FEWER MEN WORKING

People may spend more money in Britain, on peaches, cigars and limousines. Stock market prices may go up, and brokers may wear the smiles of contented cats. All that could conceivably accompany a fake recovery.

But the fact that British coal, this apparently permanent industrial invalid, has begun to totter about is one of the best proofs of the robust character of the British come-back. For any inquirer into this recovery, a visit to Newcastle, certainly the most famous if not really the most ancient coal center in all the world, is most valuable.

On the road out of Newcastle new buildings extend for miles. England is building more this year than ever in its history.

But the irony of the British coal industry is that the healthier it becomes, the fewer men it employs.

In the screening and cleaning plant at Ashington, largest and most modern in England, the effects of mechanization can best be studied. Down below this and adjacent collieries there are 68 miles of roads in the mines. In the galleries running off these roads men are cutting out coal at the rate of 10,000 tons a day.

There are 9000 men employed, and each turns out half again more coal than his father did, and so despite production there are 1000 unemployed coal miners in the district.

This result of mechanization shows most plainly in the screening and cleaning operations. The absence of human labor in a modern screening and cleaning plant is startling.

Here in "backward" England, the lesson of modernization has been learned. All about us were machines which our engineer guides explained were either American made or modelled after American types.

No doubt the Ashington collieries are an exception in the British coal industry. But they are an exception that is finding imitators, for, very gradually, the output per man in British coal mining is increasing.

PRODUCTION INCREASES

And gradually, very gradually, coal production is climbing. Coal turned the corner in the latter part of 1933. This year, persistently, it has climbed.

British industry is giving the modern coal mines of Britain all they can do to keep orders filled.

you lend money to dear friends in Europe.

Paying interest on that twenty-seven billion debt, at the rate of only three per cent, will cost Uncle Sam or American taxpayers, seven hundred and ten million dollars a year, a sum almost equal to the national debt before 1914, forty per cent more than the total cost of running the government for a whole year when Tom Reed said extravagance would ruin us.

Not content with mere "inflation," this government is inflating with bonds that bear interest, and at the present moment that "conservative inflation" puts one single item of seven hundred and ten million dollars a year on the taxpayers' backs.

A United States government bond, mind you, no longer payable in gold, has nothing but the government's name and is no better than a greenback with the same government's name on it.

By using greenbacks instead of silly bonds, that "little item" of seven hundred and ten million dollars a year could have been saved.

In London long ago police and public were horrifed when a maniac known in crime's history as "Jack the Ripper" murdered one miserable woman after another, apparently with a maniacal desire for revenge on womankind.

The public and police in Paris are agitated and puzzled concerning some supposed "mad man" who has sent twenty dangerous explosive bombs through the mails, each containing a tube of dynamite, to be exploded by a cap when the package was opened.

A number of French postoffice employes have been wounded by these bombs sent with letters signed "The Three Judges of Hell" denouncing and threatening the French people, regardless of age or sex.

The sender of the bombs appears to be a man of some education, since he signs one of his letters "Minos, Eaque, (Aecus) Rhadamanthe," three judges that according to Greek mythology, "mete out justice in hell."

The earth's uneasy quaking spread from one continent to another. A few days ago the Argentine was shaken and Genoa, in northern Italy. Yesterday, Calcutta sent word of earthquake shocks in Afghanistan and Baluchistan, worse than earthquakes that killed thousands in India last January.

"The whole northwest Himalya range," part of the earth's greatest pile of mountains, is reported badly shaken. The wind "bloweth where it listeth," and the earthquake is equally uncertain.

KIDNAPED TRIO RELEASED

By Associated Press

St. Joseph, Mo., June 15—Three men kidnaped yesterday near Davenport, Ia., were released here early today, and their abductor captured.

The men, Elmer Schleuter, policeman, Al Schultze, baseball man, and Dr. W. H. Fitch, Walcott, Ia., veterinarian, were released by the kidnaper here at 3.43 a. m., and 15 minutes later police arrested Joe Palmer, 32, who was said by the trio to have been the abductor.

Palmer escaped from a Texas prison farm last Feb. 16, when Major Crowson, a guard, was killed.

Schultze said Palmer's sole object in the kidnaping was to escape capture and identification. No mention of ransom was made. Palmer took approximately $135 from Dr. Fitch, $93 from Schultze, and $1 from Schleuter. He overlooked a roll of $300 the doctor carried.

Ely Lash Brings Choice of Cole

Women Add Color to Democratic Events

By JOHN T. LAMBERT

The Auditorium, Worcester, Mass., June 15—General Cole is nominated. The delegates swung to him on the third ballot. Under the lash of Governor Ely and Senator Walsh.

It was a battering down process. A "Stop Curley" Campaign. Walsh and Ely wanted to avoid the appearance of it.' But it was forced out into the open. Where everyone might see it. And draw his own conclusions.

Curley's surprising strength forced their hands. He entered the campaign for governor two weeks ago, cold. The delegates had been elected. Many of them were already pledged. All the other aspirants had been at work for weeks.

What is Hurley's future? Will he run for Lieutenant-Governor? With Cole. Against his old friend, John W. Haigis, the G. O. P. nominee. Or for State Treasurer again? Or will he take the post as Assistant Secretary of the Treasury of the United States? Which was offered him months ago. As an inducement for him to quit the Gubernatorial race. And which he then declined.

Effort made to find how Mrs. Louis McH. Howe voted. Wife of personal secretary to the President. Effort unsuccessful. Personal guess: for Cole. But the guess is only a shot in the air. Maybe a blank cartridge.

Sensation: City Councillor Clement Norton was elected a delegate to this convention. First time the alert young man ever declared any party fealty. On second ballot voted for Curley for governor. Of whom he had been the severest critic. In the past.

Governor Ely gets Judge Joe Monahan of Belmont into his room. At the Bancroft. Tries to drag him away from State Treasurer Charles F. Hurley. And is firmly told that Monahan will still be fighting for Hurley. When, and if, and after, Hurley forgets to fight for himself.

Delegate Moran arises to nominate ex-Senator Robert E. Bigney for permanent chairman of the convention. Whom the Walsh-Ely people don't want. And is yanked back into his chair. By a colleague. Who threatens: "Joe Ely will be governor for six months yet. And can make or break you."

Senator David I. Walsh is nominated. And appears before the convention. Smiling, affable and dignified. Given a rousing reception. While the thought still lurks in his mind: "Can we put General Cole over on these delegates? Who have shown themselves to be somewhat unruly. Under dictation of leaders."

He has in mind the smashing victory just won by Senator Joseph Finnegan of Boston. Finnegan is convincing. Small of statue, probably five feet five. Dreamy blue eyes. An air of Irish romanticism in his pallid face. But a powerful, musical voice that can be heard in every nook of the great arena. And, best of all, the conviction of sincerity.

MISS MARY CURLEY

Finnegan hates double-dealing. And despises the lobby at the State House. "Which buttonholes the public officials. At the doors of the Senate and House. And secretly, and corruptly, seeks to influence them against the public interest." The convention adopts his anti-lobby plank with a whoop. So overwhelmingly that the resolutions committee, which declined to put it in, fears to ask a recount.

Finnegan goes to the well again. This time to urge a flat-rate throughout the state. For compulsory automobile liability insurance. Representative John Derham appeals to the country vote. More risk in the city traffic. We should pay only for what we get. Finnegan has gone to the well once too often. The country vote is against him. This plank loses.

Mary Curley enters the auditorium. Her father is ready to be placed in nomination. She hears the words of adulation bestowed upon him. And the cheers of the convention. It is to her not a new experience.

But always an agreeable one.

And here is Miss Mary Ward, the Immigration commissioner. By virtue of Mrs. Roosevelt's fondness and respect for her, she is for Mayor Russell, first. And Jos. P. Carney next.

United States Marshal John J. Murphy is on the hustle. Agog for Curley, it is said. Yes, 'tis so. He stops by to confirm it personally. Knows that "Young Jim" Roosevelt is agreeable to it.

Edward G. Morris of Quincy pops up. To protest the appointment of a Quincy Democrat, named Foye, as a vice chairman of the convention. On the ground he is not a delegate. And therefore ineligible. The chair sustains the protest and appoints Delegate Edward G. Morris of Quincy to be a vice chairman.

Mrs. Joseph A. Maynard, modishly gowned, is an interested spectator. From a front row. Casts admiring glances at her husband. Who is chairman of the state committee. Glances of approval shared by her sister. Miss Anne Moore. Who is here from Lawrence. To hear all. See all. Tell nothing. Like most discreet ladies.

Ex-Mayor Gleason of Brockton presented the platform. As chairman of the resolutions committee.

The platform declares for lower public utility rates. Consistent with reasonable profits on money honestly invested in the business. This draws a mild cheer. Asks for a change in present immigration laws. Which permit savage separation of unfortunate families. This commands more applause.

The real outburst came for the plank which denounces block booking of motion pictures. "Which compels exhibitors to accept pictures unwholesome, indecent and immoral." Women lead in the applause.

The babies weighed a total of 11 pounds, 3 ounces the last time they were placed in the scales, a gain of three ounces. Annette, next to Yvonne, the heaviest, was the only one to lose, dropping ¼ ounce.

CURLEY TO CARRY FIGHT INTO PRIMARY AGAINST COLE

HURLEY SWITCH GIVES MACHINE VICTORY

By Bernard J. Doherty

that he will battle General Cole in the primaries, Governor Ely issued his admonition to 'stop kidding.' Curley had charged the governor with being a dictator.

"I don't admit that I am a dictator," said Governor Ely, "but it looked to me that he was going to be a dictator or I was.' Tell the mayor he ought to stop kidding. I think anyone who made such a fight as he did to get the nomination ought to abide by the convention decision.

"If he wanted to make a fight at the primaries, he should have followed the tactics of former Governor Fuller and kept away from the convention."

Infuriated against State Treasurere Charles F. Hurley for the release of his delegates which resulted in a landslide for General Cole, the Curley supporters were out today to block any move to place Hurley on the state ticket.

"I have only begun to fight," former Mayor Curley declared after his defeat for the nomination for Governor, as he pushed his way from the platform of the Municipal Auditorium. "The voters will desdie the issue in the September primary."

Asked if he meant he would go into the primary against General Cole, he snapped:

"Of course," he snapped. Then he added wrathfully, "I'll take him." Further along his way out of the building, the former mayor said: "Everything was done to prevent an honest choice of the voters. I knew that when I started this fight and I made preparations for it. I will be a candidate this Fall and I'll be the next Governor of Massachusetts."

UP TO VOTERS, SAYS CURLEY

"The convention was dictated and controlled from the beginning and opportunity for honest expression became either difficult or impossible for many delegates.

"I shall submit my case to the electorate in September and permit the Democrats of Massachusetts to determine for themselves whether it is their wish that they exercise their judgment in the selection of a nominee for the Democratic party for the office of Governor or accept the nominee dictated and machine-rollered through by the bosses of the convention"

NAMED BY MRS. HOWE

Mayor Hurley was placed in nomination by Mrs. Grace Hartley Howe of Fall River, wife of President Roosevelt's secretary, Louis McHenry Howe. Hurley's candidacy was seconded by J. Paul Keefe, close friend of Governor Ely. Martin T. Hall, Natick, was nominated by "Eddie" Morris of Quincy, Harvard football announcer.

Former City Councillor Francis E. Kelly of Boston was put in nomination by Richard Casey of Boston. Chairman Harlow read a telegram from Kelly declining the honor.

Mayor Hurley, nominated on the first ballot, addressed the convention and pledged a militant campaign.

Professor Frank L. Simpson, addressing the convention, expressed his happiness at the choice of his friend, General Cole, to head the ticket.

Simpson pledged his services in every way towards the success of the ticket.

Mayor Russell of Cambridge thanked his friends for their support and said:

"My services are now and always at the service of the new leader, General Charles H. Cole."

COLE GTS BUSY

General Cole also addressed the convention saying:

"I am the nominal leader of Democracy in the state. Responsibility is on my shoulders, but also on the shoulders of all.

"I will start today to wage a campaign that will bring about the election of all Democratic candidates.

WOMEN IN PARADE

Bernard L. Cleary of Taunton, Dr. Joseph Santosuosso of Boston warm friends of former Mayor Curley, were placed in nomination for secretary of state.

Mrs. Mary di Pasquale Murray of Milford, mother of three children, and Ely-Walsh choice for secretary of state, was then presented and the first parade was on. Women delegates to the music of the big Auditorium order filed up and down the aisles with district banners aloft. They were given a big hand by the delegates and by the thminly-occupied galleries.

Other nominations followed for Robert H. Bryan of Berlin, and former Senator John F. Buckley of Dorchester.

After the vote this endorsement of Dr. Santosnosso was made unanimous.

State treasurer, Charles F. Hurley was nominated to succeed himself.

It was understood that General Cole would have liked Professor Frank L. Simpson of Boston University Law School to run with him for attorney-general. Professor Simpson, a defeated candidate for Governor, was consulted on the matter. He is understood to have declined. Vincent Brogna of Boston was also considered for this post. He, too, declined.

Mrs. Murray was agreed upon by the leaders over Dr. Helen I. Doherty because it was expected her derivation would appeal to the Italian-Americans.

"I will be given the Republican nomination for governor," said Frank A. Goodwin in his comment on the line-up. "And by entering the Democratic primaries I will find out just how many members of that party are sick and tired of being used by grafting politicians and State street manipulators.

"The results of the two conventions prove conclusively that the State street bankers, and insurance and power interests control both parties.

"John Richardson sat behind the scenes on the stage at the Republican convention and picked the candidates and Governor Ely did likewise yesterday at the Democratic convention.

"Both are members of the same law firm and that firm represents these interests. With Cole and Bacon as candidates, regardless of the outcome, State street would win.

"Charlie Cole is a nice man personally, but he has always been an errand boy and Bacon is Morgan. Ely wants Bacon and he picked the weakest candidate in the Democratic convention to oppose him. Under this two-party system 1,600,000 voters will go to the polls next November to vote for one of these two men selected by the State street exploiters unless enough of them have common sense enough to rebel in the primaries and defeat both of these hand-picked marionettes."

BARTLETT BACKS COLE

Joseph W. Bartlett of Newton one of those who contested for the gubernatorial nomination said today he was "delighted" over the choice of General Cole.

"The general has been my close personal friend for thirty years. He is qualified by experience and ability for the high office to which he has been nominated. He has a most pleasing personality and he will be the choice of the people in the November election. I will do everything I can to assist him in the coming campaign."

The nomination of Gen. Cole as the party's standard bearer came on the third ballot taken by the delegates in the Worcester convention after Representative Paul A. Dever, of Cambridge, released the Hurley delegates. Dever had previously placed Hurley in nomination for Governor.

In this third and deciding ballot, Curley received 181; Hurley, 29; Russell, 11; Bartlett, 4; Simpson, 3, and Cole, 430. The total vote was 648, 325 being necessary for nomination under the majority rule.

The former Boston mayor's showing in the western districts surprised many of the observers. It was considered a remarkable feat of organization work on the part of Curley in view of the fact that he had been actively campaigning for but two weeks.

Choice of Convention

Fisherman's Will in Court Fight

Appearing for two children in the contest over the $25,000 will of Captain Frank A. Hall, late Gloucester skipper, Attorney James E. Callahan filed a motion in Salem probate court asking that issues be framed for a jury trial. Miss Grace M. Hall of Gloucester, the third child, was willed the bulk of the captain's property.

MRS. H. R. HALL GAS VICTIM

Mrs. Ruth E. Hall, 33, of Morse street, Watertown, widow of former Park Commission Chairman Harold R. Hall, was found unconscious on the kitchen floor of her home today. Gas was flowing from an open jet in the range.

Her mother, Mrs. Samuel G. Thayer, who lives upstairs, discovered her and summoned firemen. Mrs. Hall was revived in a short time with an inhalator. Firemen said it was apparently an accident.

Mother of 13 Gets Divorce on Cruelty Charges

Although she was the mother of 13 children, six of whom die Mrs. Loretta Cellucci, of Shannon street, Brighton, today divorced Cesido Cellucci in Suffolk Probate Court, on charges of cruel and abusive treatment.

Mrs. Cellucci told Judge Joseph M. McCoole that she and her husband were married in 191 in New York, and later came to Boston to live.

"He beat me lots of times," she testified, "and once twisted my arm and blackened my eyes in a fit of rage."

Mrs. Cellucci asked for the custody of five minor children, which was granted. The sixth child, now of age, is a dancer on the stage.

Another petitioner was Mrs. Anne Michelson of Castlegate road, Roxbury, who discovered John Michelson because, after a week-end drinking bout, he beat her, and she fainted later on from his abuse. Once she wanted to go to a wrestling show with a woman friend, she said, and he threw her against the wall, stopping her from going.

Walter Cassin, of Bristol, Conn., divorced Pearl because she insisted on going out nights, and coming back early in the morning.

DIVORCE SUIT BABY MSSING

Gloucester, June 15—The much sought baby of Harold F. Allen and his wife, Eleanor L. Allen, was still missing today despite efforts of the police and writs of habeas corpus demanding that the father return the child.

Decision is awaited in the divorce action brought by Mrs. Allen against her husband which resulted in the mysterious disappearance of the 16-months-old daughter, Sandra June Allen.

Mrs. Allen had obtained a temporary custody of the child.

$300,000,000 PROBE OF ARMY TO GO DEEP

By International News Service.

Washington, June 15—Investigation will be conducted into the affairs of the Army before the new Congress convenes in January.

Armed with authority to rake a fine-toothed comb over the Army's handling of $300,000,000 funds each year, the House Military Affairs Committee plans to seek an additional fund of $10,000 for its work.

The committee's inquiry, which is being conducted through subcommittees, already has covered purchase of airplanes, the lease of the Army Base at Newark, N. J., to the Mercur Corporation at a low figure, and automobile purchases.

The general staff of the army and the highest ranking officers—for the most part at least—have privately been exonerated by members of the committee. They assert that aside from the air corps controversy over awarding of plane contracts, the information which has caused them to propose expansion of the investigation involves lesser lights in the army.

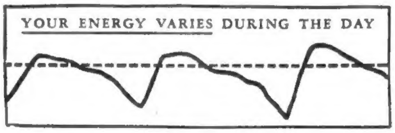
An Interesting New Discovery Every Smoker Should Know!



Experience of Camel Smokers Confirmed!

In New York a famous research laboratory announces a basic discovery that throws new light on our past knowledge of cigarettes. It embodies an "energizing effect." Through it the flow of your natural energy is restored in a harmless... utterly delightful manner. Fatigue and irritability quickly fade away. Thus an experience long known to Camel smokers has received new scientific confirmation. You do "get a lift with a Camel," and it is a pleasure that you can repeat as often as needed—all day long. For Camels never get on your nerves.

Feel Played Out?
Let CAMELS Increase
Your Flow of Energy

Are you irritable... cross and fussy when tired? Then light a Camel. As you enjoy its cool, rich flavor... notice how quickly you feel your flow of natural energy restored.

This fact is known to many through their own experience. How that "done-in" feeling drops away. How your natural pep and energy come flooding back and you are again able to face the "next move" with a smile!

NATURAL ENERGY IS RELEASED

The effect is produced by Camels in a wholly safe, natural, and utterly delightful way.

So, whenever you feel run-down, tired and irritable, just light a Camel. Enjoy its fragrance to the full—let your flow of energy swing back—and you are your real self again!

NO NERVE IRRITATION WITH CAMELS

You can smoke just as many Camels as you want. And it's a pleasure that actually helps you to maintain your energy.

And the finer, more expensive tobaccos in Camels never get on your nerves!

TIRED OUT FROM SHOPPING...and then she smoked a Camel!

CAMEL'S Costlier Tobaccos never get on your Nerves

Camels are made from finer, MORE EXPENSIVE TOBACCOS—Turkish and Domestic—than any other popular brand.

WATCH OUT for weariness and irritability that come from a low level of energy. Smoke a Camel for a quick comeback in the flow of natural, healthful energy... as frequently as you wish. You will feel like your real self again, and you'll like Camels—a matchless blend of costlier tobaccos!

Model Builders' Course—Lesson 9

Get set, Junior Birdmen! Let's start construction of our all-Balsa low-wing flier in today's lesson in the model builders' course for beginners. And, remember, girls, it will be just as easy for you as it is for the boys.

Having successfully completed our first glider, we shall have no difficulty in building this fine propelled craft which is similar in design. It incorporates however, such additional steps as the wing clips, which permit an adjustable wing; motor hooks, which permit the use of a rubber motor and the carving of a propeller, which, of course, is necessary for a propelled model.

Stanley H. Cohen

We begin the construction of this model just as we did our glider, by building the wings, tail units and motor stick, and the work is the same except for the difference in the sizes of their members.

The all-Balsa low-wing flier is a larger model than our first all-Balsa glider.

2-Inch Dihedral Is Necessary Now

Take the piece of Balsa sheet one-sixteenth (1-16) by two and one-quarter (2¼) by eighteen (18) inches and round off the tips, with a razor blade, as shown in diagram "A" published in today's column. Then sandpaper the surfaces and edges of your wing with a piece of fine sandpaper.

That is all there is to the wing except to give it dihedral angle. Follow the same method as was published with the directions for building the all-Balsa glider except that a two-inch block or book is placed under each wing tip. This model requires a wing with a two-inch dihedral instead of one inch.

Remember, all you have to do is measure nine inches in from each wing tip, with your razor, make an impression from leading edge to trailing edge (front to back along width), and then split, but do not break off, your two wing sections. Place a two-inch block under each wing tip, press down on the split line and apply glue. Hold center down with a weight until dried, and then you have a permanent dihedral angle in your wing, which will make it look like a shallow "V."

How to Construct Stabilizer Unit

The rudder is the upright member of the tail unit and the stabilizer the flat member. These two members are cut from the one thirty-second (1-32) by two (2) by twelve (12) inch Balsa sheet.

By following the measurements of the stabilizer given in diagram "A" in today's column, you should have no difficulty for it is cut out of your Balsa sheet the same way that the stabilizer for your glider was.

Note that the stabilizer is but seven and one-half (7½) inches in length while your piece of Balsa sheet is 12 (twelve) inches long. Three and one-half inches of this sheet of Balsa is needed for your rudder, which will be described in the next lesson appearing in this column on Monday, so be sure you have what is left over.

In our next lesson you will be told how to construct the motor stick, and cut out the wheels. After that we will have a lesson in propeller carving and then another in the making of wire fittings such as the landing gear, motor hooks and wing clips, etc.

Be sure that you follow this course carefully. It really isn't difficult to build a model if you make no false steps.

Essay Closing Time Drawing Near

Today is your last chance, Junior Birdmen, to enter the essay contest and win one of the two bronze trophies, donated by the New England Aircraft School, and to be awarded the member of Group "A" and the member of Group "B" who send in the best letters on "What I Learned at the Junior Birdmen Field Day."

Your letter must be postmarked before midnight tonight, so write it immediately and drop it in the mail, addressed to Junior Birdmen, 100 Summer street. Under the rules you must write not more than 200 words, using one sheet of paper and writing on one side of the page only. Write your name, address and membership number in the upper left hand corner of the page.

You'll be proud to be the owner of one of these trophies and writing a letter of 200 words or less ought to be easy after seeing the New England air festival. Send your entry in now. YOU may be the winner.

The first of a series of official U. S. Army Air Corps insignias will be published in tomorrow's column. This will comprise the most complete set of insignias ever published. Be sure you keep these valuable and authentic drawings for your scrap book.

The picture of the Junior Birdman printed today is Stanley H. Cohen, 10, of 17 Manchester road, Brookline.

Happy Landings.

By Betty Alden

RACE DAY IS A SUMMER MIRROR of what the well-dressed woman wears when enjoying summer sports. If you are a tweed fan, you will see her in the smartest togs for town and country around the paddock . . . tweeds that even a mere man would wear. If you are the "playful-as-a-kitten" type (they've come back, you know!) the sheer, cloud-like organdys and soft bon-bon silks will make you bill and coo with delight . . . but if you are a jeunne fille, young and healthy, in tempo with the moment, the ginghams and cottons of the debutantes will excite you most . . . one must be vigorous and glowing to wear a gingham gown.

MRS. ROBERT B. ALMY

To be seen at this most talked of event of the season will be Mrs. Clark Baldwin, who was the beautiful Janice Liggett, an accomplished rider. She is bringing a large party up from Warrenton, Va., and a merry house-party will gather at the magnificent old Liggett mansion in Chestnut Hill . . .

You will see the slender, blue-eyed and charming Mrs. Robert B. Almy, joint master of the Dedham Hunt, who is a great favorite socially as well as where turf experts gather, with her delightful family of youngsters and her gracious mother, Mrs. Andrew Adie . . . The Almys and the Adies and their friends are often glimpsed picnicing under the spreading elms during race week . . .

Mrs. George Saltonstall West, that much-sought-after social leader, and her good-looking sportsman husband, are always on hand on race days with their attractive family . . . Miss Dorothy, who was presented last season, you remember, and the two strong young sons, Eric and Richard, who have won many blues with their ponies at local horse shows. Mrs. West is small, blonde and vivacious and is ever correctly attired for any occasions . . . even her rainy day things have an air . . .

Tuckerman Family to Attend

MRS. BAYARD TUCKERMAN, famed for the simple perfection of her summer apparel, will be seen in her box as usual . . . . with the three young Tuckermans, who are skilled equestrians. The young people in the social world are taught early in life to ride and take their spills like sportsmen . . .

A tall, dark and lovely person is Mrs. Robert Herrick, Jr., you will see her in spectator's sports clothes . . . she has marvelous taste in assembling her costumes and wears red and white beautifully.

Very feminine, very smart, are the three lovely Howell sisters, as famous in New England as the "Langhorne sisters" of Virginia . . . they will be in the grandstand. Vera Howell, who is now Mrs. George R. Fearing, 3d, usually selects frothy chiffons and large picture hats . . . her sister, Mrs. Frederick Dabney, who was Beatrice Howell, and who is frequently seen in smart fashion shows, chooses her costumes on more sophisticated lines . . . and the beautiful Alison Haughton, now Mrs. Hasket Derby, 2d, looks adorable in sports clothes.

Liz . . . Mrs. John Hay Whitney to you, my doves . . . whose beauty shines more brightly every time we see her, will spend her time between races overlooking the entries in the paddock . . . and she has several horses entered, among them the famous Spar (a tip!) and, of course, you can pick a winner from the Whitney stables, world famous. Have you tried hanging over the rails around the paddock to pick a winner? It is amazing how much more exciting a race can be if you have figured out an equine's length by his breadth and placed a dollar on him to at least finish. They tell me the hungry looking ones run the fastest . . . but we usually choose one with a cute name . . . something to suit our mood, like—er— Battleship . . . Galloping Duchess . . . or a Wild Dream.

Chic Frances Goodwin in Group

SURE TO BE ON HAND WILL BE Frances Goodwin, a real horse race fan, who attends the races all over the world . . . and the decorative and graceful Mrs. Forrester Clark, wife of the polo player, "Tim" Clark, who was Kitty Burrage in her debutante season, is usually the last word in chic . . . you will recognize her by a cluster of the Burrage orchids pinned on her shoulder. There will be other orchids on parade, but none so orchidaceous!

The Country Club, set amid the splendid acres of rolling country in Brookline, with background of age-old trees, is a gem of Colonial architecture . . . from its broad verandas and great windows, there is a marvelous view of the entire course stretching its emerald length for miles . . . drenched in sunlight it makes a beautiful setting for the summery costumes of the Fair Things.

Stunning Mrs. I. Tucker Burr, Jr., M. F. H. of Norfolk, may easily be picked out of a crowd . . . so smooth, so tailored, so . . . aristocratic . . . and the popular and well-known James Jackson clan will greet their friends and neighbors as they stroll about . . . and they have a host of them.

Young, curly-haired and very pretty, Mrs. Curtis Bohlen, who is on the dance committee for the "pink" ball at the Dedham Country and Polo Club after the races, will be surrounded by swains . . . It is hoped to make this ball an annual event to rival the world-famous Maryland Hunt Club Ball in Baltimore, one of the most exclusive events in the country . . .

Popular Hostesses to Attend

MRS. ARTHUR L. RICHMOND, slim, svelte and very chic, will spread herself around, being one of society's popular hostesses.

From Hamilton (Sleepy-Hollow) on the North Shore, you will glimpse Mrs. Sumner Pingree, who was Mary Weld of that famous New England name . . . her costumes are very smart and very wearable . . . and Flying Horse Farm is noted for its warm hospitality.

Frances Goodwin

One of the most enchanting members of the smart young married set is Mrs. Gelston King . . . she is always exquisitely frocked, very feminine, and you will recognize her by a dazzling smile and deep dimples . . .

Mrs. Josiah H. Child, who is among the first to wear the new shorter-skirted sports dresses, will likewise be seen somewhere between the clubhouse and the paddock . . . and the dainty, blonde Mrs. Frankie Hamlin will be seen in the B. Nason Hamlin box having a gay time . . . why not?

And so through the roll-call of the Queens of Sport . . . you will see bevies of the Fair Things and their Favored Ones straddling rails, perched on the edge of boxes, and strolling about to see and be seen . . . and many Queen Marys, bless their hats!

Informally gowned in white starched chiffon and large horsehair hat with white snapdragons as her bridal bouquet, Miss Kent made her vows. A reception at the home of Mr. Mrs. Warner W. Taylor in West Newton followed the ceremony and the young people received on the terrace. They will sail on Saturday on the Empress of Britain for a six-week stay in England and will be at home at Craigie street in Cambridge after September 1.

Miss Hocking Bride Today

White mousseline de soie, its beauty being in its simplicity, and lilies of the valley form the bridal raiment of Miss Hester Hocking as she repeats her marriage vows at 4 this afternoon in St. John's Memorial Chapel in Cambridge with Donald James Campbell.

Miss Joan Hocking as her sister's only attendant is gowned in shell pink mousseline de soie, and the bride's mother, Mrs. Ernest Hocking, wears a gown of maroon chiffon.

Professor Ernest Hocking gives his daughter's hand in marriage and the Reverend Arthur McKenny of New Haven performs the ceremony. Alexander Kenneth Campbell, the twin brother of the bridegroom, is his best man, and the usher staff includes the Messrs. Edward Kracke, John Shurcliff, John Waldon, Gratian Yatsevitch, Timothy Cheney, Robert Lamb, Charles Taylor and Hubert Alexander.

A reception follows at the Hocking residence on Quincy street, after which the bridal couple are starting on a motor trip across the continent to visit the bridegroom's mother, Mrs. Richard Campbell, in Los Angeles.

Aldrich-Tweed Ceremony in Church

A VERY YOUTHFUL AND exceedingly exquisite bride is Miss Eleanor Tweed as she plights her troth to Mr. Nelson Aldrich at a noon ceremony today in Eliot Church in South Natick. Miss Tweed, the daughter of Mr. Harrison Tweed of New York and Countess Paul Palffy of Paris, is being given in marriage by her father, and the Reverend Arthur Lee Kinsolving of Trinity Church and Doctor William G. Thayer of St. Mark's school officiate at the ceremony.

A Vionnet model of gleaming white satin, made very simply with long sleeves and a tulle veil, completed by a bouquet of calla lilies fashions the bridal costume.

Six bridesmaids and a maid of honor precede the bride altarward. Her sister, Miss Katharine Tweed of New York, as maid of honor is gowned in blue organdie embroidered in corn flowers, poppies and daisies, with a large plain blue organdie hat and an arm bouquet of corn flowers, poppies and daisies.

Bridesmaids

Miss Abigail Aldrich, the bridegroom's sister; Miss Sally Curtis, a cousin of the bride; Miss Isabella Gardner, Miss Nina Phillips, sister debutantes of Miss Tweed's; Miss Louise Auchincloss and Miss Frances Ellen Clark, both of New York, form the coterie of bridesmaids. Their gowns are the same model as the honor attendant's, in all white with white hats. They also carry bunches of corn flowers, poppies and daisies.

Mr. George D. Aldrich as best man heads a large staff of attendants of the bridegroom. These are Mr. Marc Peter, Jr., son of the Swiss ambassador to Washington; Charles Mixter, Avery Sawyer, Richard Baxter, LeGrand Thurber, Guy Hays and Edward Hutchinson Robbins, son of the United States minister to Canada.

The reception is being held at Cessbrook Farm in Norfolk, the country home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Pelham Curtis, Jr., the latter a sister of Countess Palffy. Last evening the entire bridal party was entertained at dinner by Mr. and Mrs. William T. Aldricih, parents of the groom, at their home in Brookline.

Post-Debutante

The bride's mother, who is a guest of Mr. and Mrs. John S. Parker of Commonwealth avenue, with whom Miss Tweed has made her home this past winter, attends the wedding gowned in a Parisian model of chiffon, printed in yellow, black and white, with a large black hat. Mrs. Aldrich wears a dark blue net dress with a matching hat.

Miss Tweed is a debutante of the past season and Mr. Aldrich is a member of this year's graduating class at Harvard.

BOMB PLOT IN PARIS GROWS OMINOUS

By International News Service

Paris, June 15.—The widespread bomb plot threatening Paris business houses and even the President and Premier of the Republic, became more serious today with the explosion of a bomb in the offices of Citroen, the automobile manufactory, injuring an employe. This was followed by discovery of three other bombs. All were accompanied by threats signed "The Three Judges of Hell."

One of the bombs was discovered in the mail at the office of an American pencil company. Another was received by the Pathe Film Company. The fourth was seized in the postoffice at the Place de la Bastille.

They Just Fought for Fun; Max, Primo's Cash Tied Up

New York, June 15.—Primo Carnera and Maxie Baer were both expecting to take a flock of socks on their respective anatomies when they went into the ring last night to argue over possession of Primo's world heavyweight championship title, but neither had anticipated the socks to their pocketbooks delivered in the course of the day.

Primo caught an uppercut to the change pocket when County Clerk Gustav Bach of Hudson County, N. J., ordered a writ of attachment against $88,000 on deposit in the Commercial Trust Company, Jersey City, in Carnera's name but controlled by his manager, Luigi Soresi.

BAER GETS IT, TOO

Baer caught his blow on the bankbook in an action by J. Hamilton Lorimer, his former manager, slapping three attachments on his and his present manager's "cut" of the night's "take." Lorimer, who started Maxie in the business, has been legally declared owner of 75 per cent of his active corporeality and holds notes for $15,000 signed by the present manager, Ancil Hoffman, for the purchase of the other 25 per cent.

Clerk Bach acted on a petition by Theodore G. Skrall, assignee for Emilia Tersani, pretty London actress who won a $14,616.03 verdict against the big pug last April when an English court found him guilty of breach of promise.

Yesterday's action will keep the stilt-footed man-mountain's ham-like hands off the Jersey City dollars until he pays up for that little interlude in London or wins the legal point that will protect the sum demanded, which is growing steadily in the due course of the law of interest.

The "man mountain" was not alone in the matter of legal difficulty on the eve of the fisticuffs, for Maxie Baer, otherwise known as "the answer to a maiden's prayer," was socked with three attachments on his and his manager, Ancil Hoffman's, "cut" of the championship fight money.

Sister Loses in Suit for $10,000

Williamsport, Pa., June 15—A directed verdict for the defendant ended a $10,000 damage suit by a sister against her brother in federal court here.

Mrs. Guy A. Warren, of Southport, N. Y., sought damages from her brother, Lee Griswold, of Sayre, Pa., for injuries received in an automobile accident.

Advice to an Adventurer

Dear Rambler:

It's just too bad for an adventurous fellow like you, because you were born a couple of hundred years or so too late! All the new continents have been discovered... and most of the bearded buccaneers have already been properly strung up on a yardarm.

But there's a new kind of adventure for you in 1934... a bit of modern exploring! "Ho, for the Open Road!" Go exploring on your own this Spring and Summer into little-known roads... forgotten inland towns... hidden lakes. Discover for yourself the spots where national history was made! Re-live the dramatic scenes of another era by visiting the places where they were enacted!

Yes, go exploring, Mr. Rambler, but do a little exploring in the classified automobile columns of today's American first! We're conducting the biggest used car sale of the year this week, and the special values which you'll find listed in the classified columns will certainly convince you that this week is the time to buy! Remember, you need a sturdy "ship" to go "cruising"!

A Possible Meeting With Lee Chow as She Prepares to Leave The Larches, Revives Madge's Fear of the Chinaman

CHAPTER [illegible]

I THREW back my head and [illegible] stared at Hugh as he told me he thought Avis Atler was not nearly as poverty stricken as she pretended to be.

He nodded emphatically.

"I [illegible] course, you, with your divine charity, would not think of the possibility of [illegible] [illegible] believe she would [illegible] nothing to harm Mary and my own observation has [illegible] comment. Am I [illegible] in thinking that [illegible] went back to [illegible] er she was [illegible] concerned."

[illegible] surprised.

"You [illegible] said. [illegible] that M[illegible] [illegible] emphatic [illegible] proved of her conduct at the dinner dance we gave last summer."

If he [illegible] blind and deaf [illegible] ed. "But I [illegible] you confirm [illegible] he [illegible] I have heard [illegible] persistence [illegible] thing she wants [illegible] has [illegible] if Phil [illegible] of her [illegible] she had [illegible] through [illegible] the daughter [illegible] in distress [illegible] judging her [illegible] directed [illegible]."

"Your [illegible] convincing," I told him [illegible] "I'm almost [illegible] her statement myself."

"We'd better [illegible] any more," he said [illegible] voice. "I hear Mrs. [illegible] the door."

A MEETING WITH LEE CHOW

My neighbor bustled [illegible] ing by the Chinese servant [illegible] her haste to get to me.

"I'm sorry to have kept you waiting," she said in hurried apology, "but I simply could not get my errands done any more quickly. [illegible] sure you're all right? How is your ankle?"

"Couldn't be better. I [illegible] shing. And [illegible] haven't [illegible] layed me at all. But if you are ready now, I'll drive you home. I have to go to Southampton on an errand for Mother Graham, so I can take you as far as your door."

"Oh, that will be splendid!" she exclaimed. "That is, if it doesn't put you out."

"How could it?" I asked her, but her face was suddenly clouded with anxiety.

"I don't think you ought to be driving around alone," she said. "Suppose you had [illegible] trouble. You ought not to [illegible] yard. I think I'd better [illegible] with you."

"Didn't you [illegible] a few minutes ago [illegible] you were?" I asked her [illegible], and Hugh [illegible].

"May I offer [illegible] ces?" he asked. "I was going over to Southampton a little later anyway, and I might as well go a few minutes earlier than I planned to. I'll promise to attend to all tires, and to see that you reach the farm house again safely. Will that make you feel better, Mrs. Ticer?"

"I'll say it will," she said fervently, and then Hugh started, as if at some forgotten duty or courtesy.

"How remiss I have been!" he said. "Lee Chow will never forgive me if I let you go without his seeing you."

NEW FEAR OF CHINAMAN

I wanted to cry out that I had no desire to see [illegible] Chinese friend [illegible] him [illegible] I wanted to [illegible] I was very sure Lee Chow [illegible] knew I was [illegible] the [illegible] that a few [illegible] been watching [illegible] the heavy [illegible] to what was said [illegible] I did neither [illegible] the polite acquiescence that [illegible] proposal demanded.

"Let me take you back to the living room first," Hugh said, and leaning upon his arm with Mrs. Ticer carrying my stick, I made my way back to the living room [illegible] in the [illegible].

Mrs. Ticer [illegible] me as soon as Hugh had left the room in search of Lee Chow.

"What's [illegible]. "You're [illegible] you're trembling [illegible] turn your ankle [illegible]."

I didn't know [illegible] of any pretext [illegible] agitation which [illegible] of seeing Lee Chow [illegible] gave me a nasty [illegible] but I didn't think I [illegible].

"You've no business [illegible] on it yet, at all," she said severely. "But there's no keeping you down. I know that much. But here comes the major back again, and alone."

"I am very sorry to have kept you," Hugh said, when he came up to us, "but Lee Chow is not well enough to leave his room this afternoon, he says. He begs you will excuse him."

But even as I murmured my regret, I knew that the Chinese had spoken anything but the truth. I still could see his face peering out at me from behind the curtains.

SYNTHETIC TAN OR PROTECTOR FOR THOSE WHO DON'T CHOOSE TO BURN

Shaping the Summer Coiffure

By Prunella Wood

WOMEN who put in a long, cold winter optimistically "letting their hair grew" are ready to chip it off now that the dog days are here. This is a natural phenomenon of June along with brides and [illegible] droughts and mosquitoes. So a hair cut that is new and becoming is the prize of many a treasure hunt through the salons these days, and there is a new stunt which makes the pursuit more happy.

It is the studio approach, as it were—the business of a quick portrait sketch of what you will look like when your locks are shorn to a certain pattern, and if the man is an artist with hair as well as charcoal, the results are pretty satisfactory. Hang a Garbo bob on a Hepburn fringe on your own features by blueprint and you can tell with a glance which one is your type—and all the heartache of having had the wrong one done with the scissors is escaped.

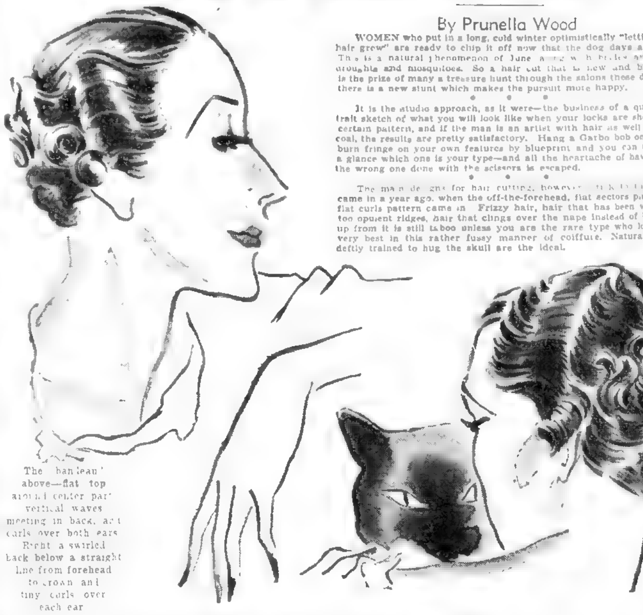
The main designs for hair cutting, however, stick to those that came in a year ago, when the off-the-forehead, flat sectors plus small, flat curls pattern came in. Frizzy hair, hair that has been waved in too opulent ridges, hair that clings over the nape instead of brushing up from it is still taboo unless you are the rare type who looks her very best in this rather fussy manner of coiffure. Natural waves, deftly trained to hug the skull are the ideal.

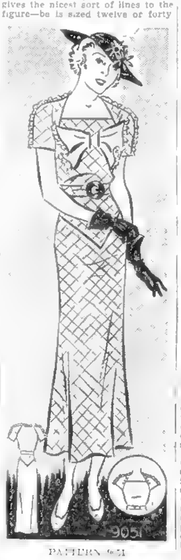


The bandeau above—flat top around center part, vertical waves meeting in back, and curls over both ears. Right, a swirled back below a straight line from forehead to crown and tiny curls over each ear.

Frilled Sleeve of Gay Net

By MARIAN MARTIN

Even if you don't especially want the big bow in the front, you will certainly want the frock. Look at the little sketch at the bottom if [illegible] Make it of plain or patterned material with the frills on the sleeves of net or of the fabric—do anything you like with it—and you will still have a chic and fascinating frock. The sleeves and the neckline turn the trick—and the yoke at the hips gives the nicest sort of lines to the figure—be is sized twelve or forty



PATTERN 9051

Pattern 9051 may be ordered only in sizes 12, 14, 16, 18, 20, 30, 32, 34, 36, 38 and 40. Size 16 requires 3 yards 36 inch fabric and ⅝ yard contrasting.

Send fifteen cents in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for each Marian Martin pattern. Be sure to write plainly your Name, Address, the Style Number and Size of each pattern.

A beautiful, complete collection of Summer Clothes is shown in the new summer edition of the Marian Martin Pattern Book. This book will help you plan a stunning vacation wardrobe. Clever beach ensembles, charming costumes for the gardener, style suggestions for the summer bride and her attendants and sun suits for children are among the special features. When 4th-Best Card Lead Is Choice of the Defense

By JOSEPHINE CULBERTSON

The success or failure of a contract at the Bridge table often depends upon such seemingly immaterial things as, for instance, whether the defending player elects to lead a fourth best card or another card chosen for some good reason. One play may result in the winning of no tricks whatever. Another play may produce one trick, while a third may produce the vital contract-setting trick, as was the case in the hand below. The holder of the East hand, upon whom the burden of correct defense rested, is a very fine player, a past and present champion in the world of Bridge. He has a well earned reputation for finding the correct defense, but in this instance probably because he did not stop long enough to study out the division of the other cards in the suit, he failed to make the correct lead.

♢ J 9 5 3

South:

♣ Q J

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♣	Pass
2 ♠	Pass	3 ♠	Pass
4 ♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

The march of the North and South players to game was not impeded by any adverse bidding. Against the four-spade contract West opened the club 2, and East won with the Ace. It was of course, obvious that the club suit was established. It was equally obvious that the setting tricks could not be developed in diamonds. East had a sure entry card in the spade Ace and thus a shift to hearts was clearly indicated. On the bidding it was obvious that South held the heart Ace. The only question remaining was whether he held the Ace-Queen or the Ace-Jack. If the Queen was in the South hand there was no prospect whatever of defeating the contract, so that assumption could be dismissed. If South's holding was the Ace-Jack, there was a chance to develop two heart tricks before the trump Ace could be driven out and the club suit used for discards. This East realized but did not go quite far enough. East returned his fourth-highest heart, South ducked, and West was forced to play the Queen to win the trick, leaving a major ten-ace in hearts in the Declarer's hand.

Had East instead chosen the heart 10, South would have had no play to avoid the loss of two heart tricks. He should have made a valiant effort by covering with the Jack, but after West won with the Queen, a heart return would have trapped Dummy's seven under East's King-eight and the second heart trick would have been established while East still held the Ace of trumps.

The play may be slightly difficult, but it is certainly not obscure. It is a type of play which in varying forms occurs at almost every session of Bridge.

The word nadir means the lowest point—the point of the celestial sphere vertically beneath any place or observer. It is diametrically opposed to the zenith. The correct pronunciation is NAY-der.

Late Afternoon Wedding

By MRS. BEECKMAN

DEAR MRS. BEECKMAN:

Will you please advise me as to what is proper for a lady to wear to a wedding at the Blank Hotel on Sunday afternoon at five-thirty? Is a hat necessary? Should gloves be worn while eating? There is to be a dinner after the wedding. D.

A five-thirty wedding is, correctly speaking, a day wedding, and therefore you would wear your most formal day-clothes, with a hat. However, I must admit that sometimes brides-to-be who choose this "in-between" hour for their wedding consider that they have chosen an hour for an evening wedding and expect their guests to dress according to that idea. It's a most inconvenient hour for guests usually, this five-thirty or six hour, and usually, like you, the guests invited "wonder" what they are expected to wear.

No one but the bride-to-be or her family can inform you whether they expect the wedding to be a day-time wedding or an evening wedding. And so, in the last analysis, you must, if you still have doubts, ask them what they expect. Do not wear your gloves while you are eating.

NOTES OF THANKS

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Should I send a card or note of thanks to each giver of a gift? I had the most beautiful surprise baby shower in my honor recently and I would appreciate your advice. E.

Yes, it's the gracious, the polite, the appreciative gesture to make to these kind givers who made you so happy—to write a note of thanks to each one.

Pandora Tells You

Dear Pandora:

What to do? I have a sister who makes a practice of stealing all my beaux. We got along fine. We're grand pals. But she seems to have a mania for the men I like.

We're both attractive and amusing, our friends tell us, and it isn't as though she didn't have the faculty for making her own conquests. She has and does. But, it's funny, Pandora, she has the vaguest interest in any fellow she meets unless he formerly beaued me around.

The situation is so out of hand that my attitude towards any young man who may be "squiring" me about is that it's just a temporary matter.

Oh, of course, I know I shouldn't give in so easy. And I ought to show some gumption and all that but I'd like to see what YOU'D do in this situation, I really would, Pandora.

CAROLINE, NANTUCKET

DEAR CAROLINE:

You would, would you? Well, here goes. I'd encourage a covey of also-rans and give her a run for her money. From now on, I'd suggest that you lead on the unlikeliest prospects. Give them the swellest build-up you can and then let Mamie take them on, one by one. You say she's attractive and amusing. Well, select these potential suitors for their all-around ugliness and dullness. Can she take it? I have me doubts. By the time she has decided that poor Caroline's taste has gone completely to seed, you can snap back into your old-time form with immunity. Now, into your routine, Carrie.

Shape of Lips Altered by Rouge

Question: Is there an exercise or reducing cream I could use that would reduce the thickness of my lips? I have a large and very poorly shaped mouth. What can I do to erase fine lines around the eyes? Is there a milk wrinkle cream I could use. I am 22 years of age. How can I bleach hair on arms and legs?

F. D., Back Bay.

Answer: I don't know of any preparation that would reduce the thickness of your lips. You can however improve the appearance of your mouth by skillful use of your lipstick. Use very little color, just enough to freshen your lips and be careful not to let it come over the edges of the lips. Let the color stop or fade out before it comes quite to the edge. If your mouth is very large, don't let the color come quite to the corners.

To erase fine lines about the eyes use a good eye tissue cream, an da good lotion. Use lots of cold water, too. I don't know about milk creams—but you can use milk or cream and it's very good for the skin good for the skin. You can bleach hair on arms and legs by using one-half teaspoon ammonia to three tablespoonful of peroxide. Apply as often as convenient.

Oval Face

Question—I have a round, full face. Could you tell me how to arrange my hair to make my face appear thinner? I am now wearing it done up. I have it behind my ears and close to my head. Is that correct? Would you advise me to wear bangs? On which side should I part it?

L. M. R., Springfield.

Answer—Since your face is round and full, I do not advise bangs. If you can devise some becoming way of drawing your hair back from your forehead, it would make your face appear more slender also thinner. Wear it close at the sides and behind your ears if it becomes you. Avoid a fluffy effect. Wear a soft, flat wave and keep your hair very neat. Part it on either side. In fact, it is better for the hair to change the parting from side to side.

New Gifts for Father's Day

Lest you forget—Sunday is father's day.

It's the one day of the year when the tables are turned—when it's his turn to take the bows and receive praise and presents and best wishes.

Don't be too prosaic in your selections this year. After all, father is just as much a part of that grand old institution—the American home—as any other member of the family, and he appreciates the sentimentalities as much as mother does.

Gay little gifts which can be both practical and inexpensive will warm the cockles of his heart as all the neckties and cigarettes and pipes in the world can never do. And you'll win his undying gratitude for remembering him with something that is really different.

There is a most attractive imported bakelite bowl with soap that will delight any man from sixteen to sixty. It is scented with the kind of fragrance that men really like and it comes with an after shaving lotion. The soap will last a year—it's for shaving of course—and the price of both is around one dollar.

If father likes cologne for after shaving or after the bath, there is one that is suggestive of woodsy things and springtime. There is nothing feminine about this scent. It comes in a seventeenth century pinch-bottle and dad will cherish this gift long after the last drop of cologne is gone.

If you are interested to know where these attractive gifts may be purchased telephone to Juliet Shelby, Liberty 4000.

You Can Be a South Sea Island Maiden Without Spending One Minute on the Beach

No longer do you have to labor all summer under a merciless, broiling sun to get your skin to that adored bronze stage. Follow Rochelle Hudson's method by using a special cream that will bring about that universally becoming effect without the annoyance of burning and blistering. Or if you prefer a synthetic tan, Juliet Shelby knows of a cream that will give you a grand sun-tan look that can't be detected from the real thing.

By Juliet Shelby

THIS BUSINESS OF TANNING has at last dwindled down to a matter of personal taste and some common sense. It is no longer necessary to wallow in melting oils on the beach until your skin is charred and toughened, to be in fashion.

If you tan naturally, then lucky you, go to it! Be the envy of all the partly bronzed ladies who loll on the beach. On the other hand, if you do not tan, but just sizzle and burn red and peel, then by all means protect your delicate skin from the sun's rays and retain your natural skin-tone.

Sun baths are generally beneficial and enjoyable. They stimulate the formation of red blood corpuscles that make for health. But in the case of thin and delicate skins too much sunshine is detrimental to the complexion, even though the sunshine and air may be beneficial to the body. The skin becomes dried and wrinkled and the red, heightened color is not lovely.

So, if you have this type of skin, content yourself with a brief sun bath early or late in the day, and always protect your skin with a cream whose properties prevent sunburn.

I agree that such protection during many weeks can run into expense. That is why I thought you would be interested in a delicately scented cream that has proven its efficacy and is not expensive. This preventive contains butesin, a local anesthetic, and metaphen, one of the most powerful and safe antiseptics known to science. It also relieves sunburn—if this news reaches you after the damage has been done!

You apply it before exposing your body to the sun, and if you decide to lie around a bit after your swim, apply it again when you come out of the water.

This lovely cream is so quickly absorbed by the skin and is so free of grease that you may use it as a foundation cream whenever you wish. It is simply grand to keep that pert little nose white!

But if you cannot choke down the desire to look like a squaw, use the sun-tan make-up cream that gives a glamorous finish to your skin. A light application of this cream and you have a synthetic tan that cannot be detected from the real thing. It will save you hours and hours of sunnings on a blistering beach, and you don't have to worry about your skin becoming wrinkled and dried, either.

If you are anxious to learn the name of the sun-proof cream that will prevent sunburn, as well as the cream that gives an allur[ing] sun-tan effect, telephone to Juliet Shelby, Liberty 4000. If you prefer writing for this information, send a stamped, self-addressed envelope to Miss Shelby, Boston Evening American, Boston.

Susan Returns Her Engagement Ring and Watch to Man She Was to Have Married

CHAPTER XXV

Susan was filled with apology to the bottom of her soul, and she had a feeling that she ought to tell Wallace how she felt. But it seemed too enormous a wrong to apologize for—telling a man that you were about to break your engagement to him just when it had been publicly announced. Especially when the man had been jilted once before, as Lutie said Wallace had been jilted by Eleanor Kendall.

"I don't know what to say to you, Wallace," she mourned. "I feel as if I ought to get down on my knees to you and ask you to forgive me—"

"Oh, DRIVEL!" Wallace all but shouted in the crowded street. "All this is drivel! You're engaged to me!" He had lost all of his poise, his calmness. He went along beside her, his lips moving but making no sound as if he were saying things to himself that were best left unspoken.

They were nearing the icy stone steps that led up into the lobby of the St Vincent Hotel. As they reached them he took Susan by the arm and steered her into it and across the lobby into the dining room, where she and Allen had had tea a few days before.

WALLACE IS STUNNED

Wallace stopped to pick out the things that he wanted—a large plateful—but Susan had no eye for anything, and no appetite. She was filled with misery over the thing that she was doing, and at the same time determined not to be turned aside from the doing of it.

"I suppose I'm a little stunned by what you've just told me, Susan," Wallace said when they were seated at a sunny table and he was busy with his fork, "and perhaps I'm not thinking in a straight line, but this doesn't seem to end anything between us. You've cared for me for almost two years, and you still do. You must. Two weeks ago you did."

He broke off at that point and did some hard thinking, his brow knotted, while he spread butter on the end of a roll. "Who is it, by the way, that you've fallen for?"

Susan shook her head. "It doesn't make any difference who it is, does it?" she asked. "I'd tell you if it would do any good, but it wouldn't. You couldn't do a thing about it. I can't myself."

"You can't what?"

"Can't help caring about somebody that isn't you."

"You can tell me who it is," he said, returning in his stubborn way to his questioning of her. "That's what I want to know."

Suddenly his fork went down upon his plate with a clatter, and he crumpled his napkin down upon the tablecloth. "Good lord, I've arranged to buy that house, too!" he exclaimed. "It's too late now for you to act like a little fool, Susan—I've bought the house."

"I told you not to," said Susan. "I'm not going to live in a house that I won't like, with a man that I don't like—that I don't love, Wallace. I do like you."

As she spoke she knew that she didn't. She didn't like the narrow ugly look that had come into his face, and she didn't like to be called a fool by him.

SUSAN ADMITS LOVE

Something in her heart said ..."You must get this overe to him now. You must break away from him. Don't weaken. Tell him you're through and make it stick."

She sat silent, unable to say the unpleasant final things that would have ended everything, her whole nature shrinking from the idea of hurting Wallace any more than she had already hurt him.

The waiter came up for the rest of the lunch order and Wallace pushed the menu aside as soon as the man laid it before him. "Bring anything. The dollar lunch will do," he said impatiently.

"Now, then, you like me but you don't love me. You love somebody else. Is that it?" he asked when the waiter had left them.

"That's it," said Susan.

"But that's not all of it. I've bought a house for you," Wallace reminded her, "and your family has announced the engagement. In the newspapers, mind you, in the newspapers. And you expect me to forget all that.—You expect me to let people laugh at me and pity me because you've taken it into your head that you don't care for me any more.

"Well, Susan, I'm not going to let you do this thing to me. I'm just conceited enough to think that you still like me a great deal, and that if I hang on you'll realize it sooner or later. So I'm going to hang on. I'm not going to give you up for an instant."

His own words seem to buoy him up. When his lunch came he ate it as if he enjoyed it—breast of chicken and beet salad and raspberry water ice. And as he ate it became more and more cheerful.

"I've stayed away from you too long," he decided, "or else you've heard some gossip or other about me—and it's made you jealous. Is that it?"

"No," Susan shook her head. "I did hear some gossip about you and Eleanor Kendall, but it didn't make me jealous."

She took the Ludlow and Ludlow box, with the ring in it, from her lap and laid it on the tablecloth with the watch bracelet beside it.

"I want to give these back to you, Wallace." She shoved them across the table to him with the tip of one finger.

Wallace pick up the ring box. He held it out to her so that she could see the words "Ludlow and Ludlow" engraved across the cover.

"I suppose you wondered about this box," he said. "I ought to have told you about it—about the ring—the night I gave it to you."

Susan nodded.

JILTED BY GIRL

"Well, I'll tell you now how I happened to have it," he said lifting his chain with an air of deter- [redacted] frankness. "I bought the ring for another girl—for Eleanor Kendall, as a mater of fact—a long time ago when we were engaged. She kept it for a couple of weeks and then she sent it back to me. Broke the engagement."

He stopped long enough to pat his mouth with his napkin. "Who told you about Eleanor and me?" he asked. "You were just a young kid when I was going around with her."

"Lutie told me."

"I see." He leaned toward her and his eyes narrowed once more. "And that's really why you're trying to break our engagement, isn't it? You're sore because I gave you her ring, aren't you?"

He laughed with immense relief as if he had solved the whole thing in his own mind. "You are jealous, aren't you?—But, gosh, Susan what did you expect me to do? Throw away a thousand dollars worth of jewelry just because a girl had had it in her possession for a few days a long time ago?"

He broke the little cardboard box with his fingers and held out the ring. "Let me take your hand, Honey, and put this back where it belongs," he said, his own masterful self once more.

Susan put her hands in her lap folding them together. "No. I don't want it."

His shoulders went up in a shrug of pure exasperation. "Well, then, we'll go down to Sigler's and trade it in on a new ring. Will that suit you?"

"Wallace, I don't want any ring," Susan said emphatically.

He lost his temper then. "Well, ring or no ring, you're not going to make a fool of me! I let one girl do a stunt like this to me, but I'll be darned if I'm going to let two of you get away with it!" He helped Susan into her coat as if he were closing the Iron Maiden around her and went stalking out of the dining-room ahead of her.

Out in the street he seemed to recover himself a little. "I'm sorry I was rude, Susan," he apologized, beckoning for a taxicab, "but this simply knocks me off my rails. It wouldn't be so bad if it were the first time perhaps—but people will wonder what's the matter with me if you thrown me down. They'll say there must be some good reason why I can't keep any girl in love with me . . . I couldn't stand it, Susan. The talk. The gossip."

It was on the tip of Susan's tongue to ask him how she was to stand the talk, the gossip, when people found out—as they would find out—that she was wearing Eleanor Kendall's ring. But she said nothing and climbed into the taxicab.

He paid the driver in advance for the trip to Center street and tipped him. "I'll be out to see you soon and we'll settle all this," he said through the frosted window of the door after he had slammed it. She had a last glimpse of his face, anxious-eyed and rather drawn, as the cab left the curb.

John was standing in the hall of the house when she walked in at 2 o'clock.

"Where you been for the last two hours?" he asked as she pushed open the vestibule door. "I called here three times trying to reach you. Connie and I were married an hour ago." It was like John to toss an important fact to her in just that off-hand way.

He grinned at her, his nostrils dilating as if he were full of some kind of strong excitement. "We're leaving for Omaha tonight, she and I," he said.

"Tonight?" She shook her head and her voice trembled on the word. All week long the knowledge that John was going away very soon had clouded the back of her mind. It had been there behind all her thoughts of Allen, her happiness. "Why, I thought it wasn't settled, John. And I thought that even if you did go, it wouldn't be until next Sunday—" She burst into tears.

JOHN CHEERS SUSAN

After all, no one would ever know her and care for her as John knew her. They had grown up together in this old house full of middle-aged people, and they had always clung to each other for the comfort and understanding that no one else could give them—and now he was going away. Susan sat down on the floor and sobbed, her heart bursting with the first real sorrow she had ever known since her mother's death, which had occurred so long ago that it was like something else whenever she thought of it now.

She felt John's hand on her shoulder. "Come on, Susie, cheer up," he was saying. "This is a chance in a thousand for me, and you've got to be tickled to pieces about it—and you can come out to visit us as soon as we get settled. Buck up and help me get my clothes packed, will you?"

Susan followed him up the stairs and began to sort his neckties while he ran up into the attic for his trunk.

"If you want to do a thing badly enough, you'll do it," he had always said to Susan when she complained to him that her father would not let her take a business course or have a year or two at college. "If they won't give you the money get a job and earn some for yourself. I'll help you out, too. The trouble with you is that you give in to people to easily. You let them run you.

Brims Overshadow Hat Fashions

The picture hat was once the signpost of deliberate allure, it was almost never divorced from cabbage-size flowers, and had practically no appeal to youth. Then youth took it up in extremely sugary versions, to add to the pageantry of a bridal procession. This year, the large hat acquired a good dose of common sense, and in discreetly tailored versions comes in to town, or grows to huge proportions, always keeping its trimming well in hand, and accompanies frou frocks. It can be devastating, ravishing, and fashionably, is worlds beyond its too-droopy predecessor. Miss Barbara McKissock, sub-debutante of the 1935 season, models a black straw cartwheel at a rakish angle. She will be one of the models at the June 22 opening of the Riviera at Old Silver Beach in West Falmouth. The hat is from a Boston shop; if you would like to know more about it, phone Annice Brink, LIBerty 4000.

Martha Lee Awards Diplomas to 176 Graduates

The Martha Lee School had its final graduation party of the season on Tuesday and Wednesday of this week. There were 176 graduates who received diplomas for the first time, for having attended the series of ten classes.

Ed Young, who is known to so many of the class members, furnished some very excellent entertainment taken from his radio programs. Among these entertainers were John and Herbert Slezinger, 15-year-old radio Twins, who sang for us, accompanied by Ruth Hanson, pianist; Bernie Bennett, soloist, a student of the New England Conservatory of Music; Claire Nevulis, eleven-year-old song bird of the air, sang several selections and tap danced her way to enthusiastic applause. She was accompanied on the piano by her mother.

RADIO STARS PERFORM

The talented McGoldrick children from Cambridge, Francis, 11, and Anne, 8, won favor with their unusual harmony selections and clever dancing. Mrs. Margaret McGoldrick furnished piano accompaniment for the children. All of these youngsters are experienced radio performers and have been heard on the Uncle Bob Houghton broadcasts of the Sunday Advertiser comics.

Marion Davis, who has danced for so many of the graduations, entertained with a ballet and tap dancing.

Joyce Yoffa, one of the graduates, played for her sister, who did a Russian dance in costume.

Ray Thome, the romantic voice from the Golden West, who is a stage, radio and musical comedy star and a weekly feature at the Metropolitan Theater, sang for the group.

Refreshments were furnished by the Loose-Wiles Biscuit Company, Coca-Cola Company and H. P. Hood & Sons.

SUMMER CLASES

The summer class will begin on Wednesday morning, July 11, at 10 30. We are planning to make many dishes which are seasonable and attractive for these warm summer months. This class will also include the regular Wednesday broadcast at 11 o clock. Registrations are coming in quickly, so send along your name and address and we will see that you get a card of admission.

Spleen Removal Advised

By ROYAL S. COPELAND M. D.

FOR MANY years little was known about the spleen and the nature of its disorders. It was looked upon as a vital organ and generally believed that the human body could not function without it.

We have found out that the spleen is closely associated with the manufacture of red blood cells and the coloring matter of the blood. Its action is related to digestion. But it is now known that life can continue without this structure.

Some surgeons advise the removal of the spleen in certain blood disorders. For example, this operation may be called for in a disease known as "purpura hemorrhagica." In this affliction the victim suffers from severe and sudden hemorrhages. These follow a very slight fall or blow, and yet may be so severe as to prove fatal.

Removal of the spleen is of great benefit to many a sufferer from purpura hemorrhagica. Afterward there are no longer severe and unexpected attacks of bleeding and the patient is able to lead a useful and happy life. Unfortunately, not all cases of purpura hemorrhagica are entirely cured by "splenectomy," which is the name given the operation.

"Gaucher's disease" is another affliction benefited by the removal of the spleen. This is an [illegible] disturbance characterized by a yellowish discoloration of the skin and eyeballs. As a rule, the spleen and liver are enlarged and the victim suffers from severe bleeding from the gums, lungs and intestinal tract.

It is believed to be a hereditary disease repeatedly occurring in certain families. This slow and insidious disease is more common among men than women. It generally begins in childhood but attracts no attention until the victim is between 25 and 40 years of age.

It is only when splenectomy is performed than any relief or cure can be offered in this disease. With the removal of the spleen the anemia disappears and the patient improves. Though the disease is a rare one, we are indebted to those scientists who made available this method of cure.

Banti's disease, or splenic anemia, is another ailment of the spleen that is curable by removal of the spleen. This disease is characterized by an unusual enlargement of the spleen. Ordinarily it is met in childhood, but may be found in adults.

Dainty Menu for Father's Day

From Martha Lee's Friday morning Broadcast Over Station WAAB.

Sunday is Father's Day. That should mean a particularly nice meal in honor of the head of the household. Give him what he likes, which might be roast chicken and mashed potatoes or steak and French fried onions and pie will be the unanimous request for dessert. You can depend upon it that it will be plain, wholesome food with none of the fancy touches.

The markets are offering for your Sunday dinner about the same food items that they did last week. New spring lamb, although not much cheaper in price, is more plentiful this week. The legs are 27 cents, the forequarter 15 cents. Native chicken is coming into the market, the roasting chicken from the South Shore is selling for 38c and 40c a pound. Exceptionally good fowl is 21 cents. Spring ducklings from the South Shore are selling for from 20c to 25c. Some of the stores still have very good prices on beef, rib roast, and face of the rump 27 cents.

There is an upward trend in the prices in the fruit and vegetable markets which is noticeable in the price of green beans. This condition is caused by the lack of rain. Asparagus is still a good buy, and the native salad greens are plentiful. There are the Bing cherries from California which are also very plentiful. They can be substituted in a great many recipes that call for fruit. We have them such a short time in the year that we should take advantage of their flavor and appearance.

The first green corn is appearing on the market from Texas and is selling for a dollar a dozen. Cultivated blueberries from New Jersey, which are as large as raspberries, are selling for 85c, and the uncultivated blueberries are selling for 40c. Luscious blackberries are also to be found on the market and here again is another fruit which we have for a short season, but which we can use in many different ways.

Here is a suggestion for Sunday's dinner:

Minted Watermelon Balls
Roast Native Chicken
Dressing
Mashed Potatoes
Asparagus with Drawn Butter
Lettuce with Roquefort Dressing
Cherry Pie
Cheese
Coffee

ALLIES COUNTER GERMAN WAR DEBT MOVE

By International News Service

Sharp retaliatory measures by Great Britain and France will follow Germany's announcement yesterday, of a moratorium on all foreign debt payments.

The British government announced in the House of Commons it is prepared to sequester German trade balances in that country, to pay interest to British holders of German bonds.

France plans similar action to protect the rights of her citizens.

Berlin, meanwhile, stands pat on yesterday's warning to England and France, against taking reprisals because of the moratorium.

Copyright, 1934, by Associated Press.

Berlin, June 15—Observers professed to see today in Germany's suspension of payments on foreign debts, a move to end reparations, and, ultimately, the treaty of Versailles.

Doubt was expressed that the payments would be resumed at the expiration of the moratorium's six-month period, it being pointed out that abolition of reparations is an essential point in the Nazi program.

Great Britain and France were reported to be considering plans to protect their bondholders, possibly by [illegible]holding commercial payments due Germany.

A British note in April warned Berlin any interference with the Dawes and Young loans would be taken most seriously.

That the moratorium is a mere interlude and that Schacht will next seek to put the problem of Germany's debts on a political basis is the view held here.

German newspapers and financial circles speculated frankly as to whether the government would find half a year sufficient to recuperate Germany's finances.

Other circles expressed concern over the fate of the mark. The government apparently is determined against inflation, remembering the plight of the mark in 1923.

The latest available figures, for September, 1933, show that Germany's foreign debt totaled 7,436,000,000 marks (approximately $2,974,400,000). The total dividend among the main creditors in marks (approximately 40 cents each) is United States, 3,000,000,000; Holland, 1,529,000,000, Switzerland 1,152,000,000, Great Britain, 811,000,000; France, 477,00,000.

Escape Periodic Upsets

By taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Tablets in time

It is foolish to suffer so when you can escape pain and discomfort by taking these tablets. To obtain best results, take them all through the month. In non-surgical cases they will help to correct the CAUSE of the disturbance.

MRS. ODILON LABBE
98 Lincoln St., Lewiston, Maine

"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Tablets for painful periods and they helped me wonderfully. I used to feel very weak and had such awful pains that I couldn't stay up. I had to go to bed every month. I read about the Tablets in one of your booklets and I bought a bottle. They stopped the pain."

CATHERINE GEIBEL
109 Upland Ave., Reading, Pa.

"I am 25 years old. I suffered so with cramps that I thought I would go out of my mind. Finally my mother told me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Tablets. I can truly say that they helped me. I feel like a new person now and have no cramps to worry about."

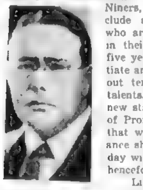
BANK TIES UP MILLENS' CASH

This Is Life by ROBERT E. ROGERS

It would be rather a pity, I think, if the class of 1909, Harvard, were to go down into history as Hanfstaengl's class, or the Nazi-Niners, as it really does include a good many people who are pretty distinguished in their own right. Twenty-five years serves to differentiate and distinguish, to bring out tendencies and to ripen talents. Few people make new starts after 45—in spite of Prof. Pitkin—so I take it that what the past performance sheet shows about us today will hold reasonably true henceforward



Robert E. Rogers

Like every class of a great university 1909 has a few men of national reputation. In politics there is Col. Theodore Roosevelt, son of "T. R." former assistant secretary of the navy, governor of Puerto Rico, of the Philippines, and now prominent in the councils of the Republican party.

Better known to the country at large than any other is undoubtedly Hans V. Kaltenborn, editorial commentator of the air, he of the rich radio voice, the unmistakable diction and the rapid fire delivery. Equally well known in the magazine field is the name of "Holworthy Hall," short story writer for the Saturday Evening Post and other fiction magazines. Holworthy Hall, the name of one of the old Yard dormitories, is the pen name of Harold Everett Porter, who specialized in golf and business romances. He is also co-author of one of the most successful one act plays of modern times "The Valiant," in which the other author has starred, Robert Middlemass, the actor, also an oh-niner.

Our finest artist in literature is Henry B. Sheahan of Quincy, who writes as Henry Beston and whose volume describing an all-year-round life in a shack on the sands of Cape Cod has been an enormously popular nature classic. It is titled "The Outermost House." Beston handles a somewhat mannered prose exquisitely; he is more a poet than many who write rhymes.

Another of our uniques is Lee Simonson, one of the owners and directors of the New York Theater Guild, one of the two greatest scene designers and producers in America, a pioneer in the new theater.

The only man in our class to have an article about him in the Encyclopaedia Britannica is Prof. Roger Adams of the University of Illinois, a chemist who is chiefly responsible for the first authentic cure for leprosy in the history of man, the chaulmoogra acid derivatives. He holds the Nichols medal, a mark of recognition of a great chemist.

Then there are the Burke-Roche twins, one of them a banker in Paris, the other, Maurice, fourth Baron Fermoy and member of the English Parliament. He is not coming back.

Arthur C. Frost, American consul-general at Calcutta, is coming all the way from India and Paul Withington is coming from Honolulu, where the Withingtons own the place

There is a newspaper man or two; Richard Grozier, owner and editor of the Boston Post; Edson Smith, financial editor of the Boston Herald. Kaltenborn, too, was for many years an editor on the Brooklyn Eagle.

Of educators, as might be expected, there are many. Dean Harold Edgell of the Harvard department of architecture and recently elected director of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts; Sidney Fiske Kimball, director of the magnificent new Museum of Fine Arts in Philadelphia; the Rev. James Thayer Addison and the Rev. Norman Nash, of the Episcopal School of Theology in Cambridge, Prof. Lawrence B. Packard, historian, of Amherst; Prof. Dexter Perkins, historian, of Rochester, and Stephen Bleecker Luce of Newport, the archaeologist.

Among our local physicians are Elliott Carr Cutler, of the Peter Bent Brigham, professor of surgery at the Harvard Medical, chief marshal of the class. Also his old crew-mate, Lawrence K Lunt, originally from the Rockies, now a distinguished psychiatrist with a hospital of his own out in Concord.

Our local politician seems to be Charles P. Howard, who has been very considerably in the news of late as chairman of the commission on administration and finance up at the State House, Massachusetts contribution to the science of good government

I could go on indefinitely. Of successful and useful men in the professions, the law, banking and securities, there are, of course, many. The bulk of the class are business men, as they should be, if the American college is to leaven successfully the lump of American life.

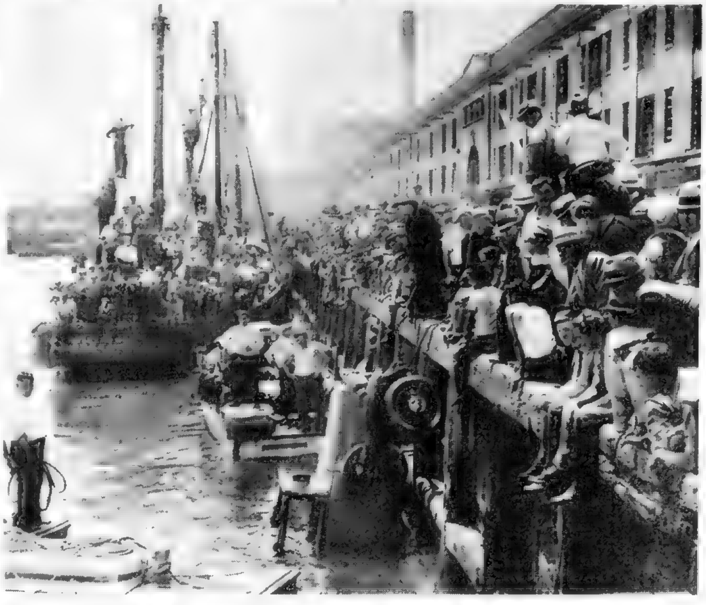
This class was graduated in the days before it was thought the business of a university to turn out a comparatively small number of carefully selected, highly intellectual "brain trusters." We had some and they have proved themselves, but the aim of Charles William Eliot was to educate a larger selection of the better minds, without, however, trying to make intellectuals out of them.

This class had two major jolts. Hardly had it begun to get its bearings, after the first decades, when the war came, killed some, and interrupted the lives and careers of the rest. Hardly had it begun to progress again in the second decade when the depression came and many of us have been marking time ever since. The motto of our class ought to be—"Look, we have come through!"

Alumni Honor St. James Priests

Three priests were guests of honor at a banquet at the Hotel Touraine by members of St. James' Notre Dame Alumni Association The guests were the Rev. James Hurley pastor of St. James' Church; the Rev. Albert Shea and the Rev. Andrew Corbett. The banquet marked the last meeting of the season

Hundreds See Death Plunge Auto Fished From Harbor



With crowds of Fish Pier workers and curious looking on, the auto in which Eugene G. O'Neil, South Braintree father of five, was driving when it plunged off the pier, was brought to the surface by firemen an hour and a half after the car took its fatal nose-dive. A short time later the man's body was recovered in 30 feet of water. Crowds stood on wharves and even on boat riggings to watch the rescue workers in action. NORMA FACES 3 CHARGES IN TRIAL

Dewing Ready for Trial as Trust Gets Order on Stolen Money

A temporary injunction was issued by Judge Joseph Walsh in Suffolk Superior Court today to restrain Murton, Norma and Irving Millen and Abe Faber from assigning any interest in money, allegedly stolen from the Needham Trust Company, and an auto, now in custody of Dedham Court

ANOTHER DENIED

The injunction was issued on a bill of equity brought by the Needham Trust Company against the four defendants named

Another request for a similar restraining order against Sheriff Samuel Capen and Clerk Robert D Worthington of Dedham Court was refused by Judge Walsh on the ground they were officials of the court and that it was unnecessary

The bill listed the money now in custody of Dedham court officials, as $1416.38 taken from the Millen brothers at the time of their arrest $38 surrendered to police by Rose Knellar, fiancee of Abe Faber, and $1730 found in a safe deposit box in Washington taken by Murton Millen under the name, Murt Nelson

SEDAN LISTED

It also lists the sedan purchased by the Millens in Washington, for which a bill of sale was found in Murton's possession

The temporary injunction restrains the four defendants from assigning any right, title or interest in the money and auto pending further order from the court

District Attorney Edmund R Dewing announced today he would move for the trial of Norma Brighton Millen on three indictments charging her with being accessory after the fact to the Needham bank holdup and murders, next Wednesday

DEWING READY

Dewing and his assistant, George W. Arbuckle, were at Dedham courthouse today, preparing the case.

Only 23 jurors will be in court Wednesday and the 12 men, who will decide Norma's fate, are expected to be picked from this group.

Dewing said today he did not expect there would be any trouble in picking the jury despite the small venire. However, counsel for the defense and the government each have six challenges. Should these be exhausted only 11 men would remain and this would necessitate summoning more jurors.

The bill of specifications on each indictment, requested by Attorney George A. Douglas, counsel for Norma Millen, has been delivered to him, Dewing said today. No inkling of its contents was given.

Norma planned for her usual recreation in the jail yard today, undisturbed by the prospect of her coming trial. The Millen brothers and Faber have assumed an air of indifference as their attorneys prepare moves to overthrow the first degree murder verdict returned against them last week.

TAX JUMP SEEN BY MAYOR

Boston may expect a jump of $5.25 in the tax rate for this year Mayor Mansfield announced.

The rate will be between $36 and $38, probably close to the latter figure, said the mayor. The tax rate for 1933 was $32.80.

"A total increase of $5.25 in the rate may be anticipated," the mayor said in explaining the factors responsible for the increase Increased requirements and reduced valuation, he said, are the main factors. Unfavorable factors cited by the mayor included:

Increased debt requirements, $1,800,000; estimated state tax increase, $500,000, estimated increase in Metropolitan assessments, $100,000, shrinkage in federal relief grants, $900,000, increase in school appropriations, $300,000, and absence of tax relief [illegible], a total of $7,100,000.

The mayor said that favorable factors amounted to $3,400,000, showing a net unfavorable increase of $3,700,000.

Boston will face another increase of $3 in the tax rate for 1935, he said, if full restoration of the municipal wages and salaries will require $5,000,000, which alone means an increase of $3.

The mayor also pointed out that the new East Boston vehicular tunnel is expected next to call for support from the city as it would take 4,000,000 vehicles a year, paying an average toll of 30 cents to pay for itself.

NORMA COUNSEL IN 'LOOP' CASE

Francis J. Hart of Charlestown was arraigned in Suffolk Superior Court today charged with the second degree murder of Patrolman James T. Malloy last week while allegedly "driving the Charlestown loop." Hart pleaded not guilty and was held without bail.

His alleged companion, James D. Taylor, also of Charlestown, was araigned with Hart on charges of larceny of an auto. They pleaded not guilty.

Attorney George A. Douglass and Attorney Hartley C. Cutter, counsel for Norma Brighton Millen appeared as counsel for Hart and secured seven days in which to file special pleas.

Bail was set at a total of $5000 for Taylor, and, although Hart was held without bail on the murder, he was further held in $4500 on the other charges. Trial was set for July 2.

O. O. McIntyre NEW YORK DAY BY DAY

New York, June 15—Thoughts while strolling: Put wooden shoes, baggy pants and cap on Bob Brinkernoff, and there's the perfect Dutch burgomaster George Jean Nathan is graying, too Captain Bob Bartlett and William S. Hart look alike. Park avenue ladies who walk to their cars puffing cigarets.

O. O. McIntyre

One word description of Lisle Bell—kewpieish. Roxy the old fox, is doing a lot of kissing in his stage stunt Queenie Smith has given sparkle to half dozen tawdry plays lately She deserves a good one. Joe Laurie, Jr. in a Fire Island shack says: "Vacation, my eye! There's no work."

What became of Vicki Baum? Nobody can look so breathless as Lyda Roberti. Or use so many glove-fitting adjectives as Percy Hammond. Something moonlighty about the name Genevieve. I hate to listen to those mnph-de-na-na singers. Broadway after dark—life in broken bits. Sid Solomon doesn't look worried.

New York's greatest cordiality is expressed at filling stations. If I never saw New York again, the thing I would want to remember is the Central Park South skyline in the dusk. Grace Lytell should always wear deep purple. Every artist and cartoonist will mourn Frank De Sales Casey.

One of my favorite people—Ben De Casseres. Daily prayer for a writer: "Save me from ridiculing anyone but myself.' And a Shakespeare slogan for the avenue: "Stay, passenger, why goest thou so fast!" Another sickening odor—the bond mortgage mess. O, yes, what is the world coming to?

An old-time circus trouper writes me Billie Burke's father, Billie Burke, was the funniest clown of the Forepauh circus in the late 80's and 90's. Later he went to Europe with a trio billed as Burke, Frisco and Andrus, a donkey, and captivated Germany. He was accompanied by his wife and Billie then in pinafores. In Vienna, Billie made her first stage appearance as a serio-comic. Following this she went to Moscow to appear in Aumont's theater cabaret, receiving 100 roubles a month. From there she went to London to attract the attention of George Edwards, later Charles Frohman and have New York at her feet.

Harlem has a one-man sidewalk band to enliven Lenox avenue promenaders. He is a versatile colored musician upon whose ankles are strapped cymbals. Just watching him makes one dizzy

Bryant Park with its new setting of trees, begins to look parkish and verdant again. For several years it has been used in a civic battledore and shuttlecock until its perpetual frazzle cataracted a midtown eye-sore. It's a Manhattan square devoted to collective search of "Help Wanted" ads. From sunup until sundown it rustles a giant sail of white paper. They read, sit and gaze.

Something about Bryant Park—Arthur Guiterman, I believe, once poetized the idea—draws the defeated Sandwich men hold nightly conclave in the southeast corner On a bench there Eugene Walter slept while his hit play was going the theatrical rounds O. Henry in his low swings preferred it to his favorite Madison Square In a long jobless upgrade of my own I found solace in its bleak unwritten law: "No questions asked"

Yet one of my most amusing cliches took place in Bryant. Along a path I passed an editor who had jounced me off a magazine. We brushed without speaking and a few steps on, at the precise instant, indulged mutual over shoulder peeks, tripping into running knee falls Had either any sense we would have dusted ourselves off and swung around for a laugh and a handshake. But it was 15 years before we met one day in Cairo and did.

Barthelmess Stars in Circus Film on Two Screens

From the circus back to the circus in two generations is the hazardous and thrilling route traversed by Richard Barthelmess in his latest role, in "A Modern Hero," which is on view at the Paramount and Fenway Theaters along with "The Merry Frinks," a most funny companion picture. "A Modern Hero" is what the movies and a good director, the German, G. W. Pabst, have made of Louis Bromfield's interesting novel. The novel has been helped. Meanwhile, the son has grown and is helped by his father. Possessed of a new automobile, the gift of his father, the son is killed the same day that Pierre's wealth is swept away in a bad stock deal. Pierre has married the daughter of one of his partners. A scene occurs when the wife discovers the identity of Pierre's son. So Pierre leaves her and returns a failure, to his mother. That hardy old trouper convinces him that there is no word failure in the lexicon of the circus and they start all over again. Jean Muir, Veree Teasdale, Florence Eldridge, and Dorothy Burgess distinguish themselves and Miss Rambeau, [illegible] is excellent.

Comedy Rules on Screen of RKO Boston

By HARRIS MORGAN

A variation of comedy and smart dialogues will be found in the two features, "Uncertain Lady" and Orders is Orders," which opened at the R.K.O Keith-Boston yesterday.

"Uncertain Lady" is an amusingly told tale of woman's emancipation in this modern day and age, which unfolds into a romantic and witty comedy drama. Genevieve Tobin portrays the fascinating role of a modern wife who is a business woman first, and Edward Everett Horton supplies a barrage of laughs with his comic sayings and capers, as the husband.

Genevieve is faced with the problem of losing Edward to Renee Gadd a charming woman who uses some of her best womanly wiles to "get her man." Genevieve agrees to give up Mr. Horton if Miss Gadd will find her another husband just as good as her old one. Mr. Horton naturally is flabbergasted and his choice in the matter is very negligible, so what can he do?

"Uncertain Lady" is a "new deal" for wives who wonder what and where their wandering husbands are at night. Pictures have been made which depict women who place pleasure before business, but this one reversed the formula successfully.

Charlotte Greenwood, for years a successful comedienne on stage and screen, is featured in the second picture, "Orders is Orders," with James Gleason and Cyril Maude.

"Orders is Orders," a Gaumont-British film is a story about a typical slangy American movie director who chooses an English barracks as a setting for a picture. Gleason as the American director and Miss Greenwood as his female assistant sells an idea to a dignified old Colonel who becomes interested in their venture, and then there are no dull moments for the remainder of the film.

Cyril Maude, whom we always think of in conection with his famous role in "Grumpy", gives an excellent performance as the grouchy old Colonel.

He Loved an Actress

Adolphe Menjou, as the actor-husband of Elissa Landi, an actress herself in the reel-life of "The Great Flirtation," the new picture at the Metropolitan Theater today.

Bowdoin's New Bill

An interesting vaudeville program, featuring Joe Fanton and Company, De Costa Duo, the Buddy Car Trio, skaters, Newman Brothers and the Marlin Duo, and two pictures, "One Is Guilty," and "Sisters Under the Skin," is the program for the week at the Bowdoin Square Theater.

Stage Trio

With three former stage stars in the leading roles, Charlotte Greenwood, James Gleason and Cyril Maude, 'Orders Is Orders,' a screen comedy, is paired at Keith's Boston Theater with "Uncertain Lady," Genevieve Tobin featured.

Paragon's Stars

Supplementing the highly-popular Palm Garden Grille's natural attractions at Paragon Park, a strong array of acts including the Demenati Arabs, the Arley's, Klings' Bears and Ritchey's water-show performers, has been booked. Several of the acts have been with Ringling's circus.

Stage Season Ends

Boston's theatrical season will close tomorrow when "Iolanthe," the Gilbert and Sullivan operetta concludes the Savoy repertory season at the Shubert Theatre.

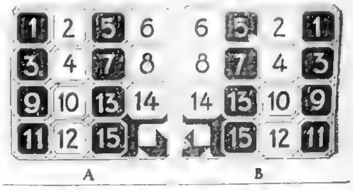
TRY YOUR HAND AT THE IMPS

Today's Problem —Four Quarters



Answer to yesterday's problem: A, Possible; B, Impossible.

Have you received your Imp yet? Thousands have got theirs.

But there are still other thousands to be given out free by the Boston Evening American, therefore if you haven't got your Imp yet you should risk your peace of mind and get yours before it is too late.

Imp is a game more fascinating than cross-word puzzles when they were the rage and the Boston Evening American with one hand held up to ward off blows offers you the Imps free.

All you need do to get one of these diabolical things is ask your newsboy or your newsdealer. If he hasn't one at the time, merely send a self-addressed and stamped envelope to the Chief Imp, Boston Evening American, 5 Winthrop Square, Boston, and one will be mailed to you.

Or [illegible] the Circulation Department of the Boston Evening American—same address—and you will be given an Imp free.

The Imps in this free distribution by the Evening American are [illegible] board puzzles, but if you wish one in colored metal, with the numbers fixed into the puzzle on a sliding device they are on sale in various [illegible] and [illegible] stores in Greater Boston.

Oriental Stunt Broadcast From West Coast

By N. F. T.

Hi-Lee—Hi-Low! Chinatown is calling on the air!

Out in the Golden Gate city of San Francisco, some resourceful radio men have the idea that all America would like to listen while 15 minutes in a Chinese telephone exchange is broadcast. Allee Samee you likee catchum (WAAB) tonight ten-florty-fi-to-lemmen-clock. I just learned "Dar Huey Bin She ah?" means "Number Please?" thanks to my trusting laundry man Quang-Shing, an able interpreter.

In all seriousness, which is how the stunt is being exploited, there's a special telephone service operating for the Oriental clients of the big West Coast city.

More than 2000 subscribers get right and wrong numbers, bus signals and those familiar "excuse it please" reports in their native tongue. So Mrs. Oo-Wah hurriedly ordering rice from the corner grocery or Mrs. Ah-Woo inviting the neighborly Mrs. Hi-Ho over for tea and maybe a session of Mah-Jong, furnishes a bit of slightly different dial diversion.

Calls among the celestial phone patrons are made by name, not numbers. If it wasn't for the fact on record that "Col. Stoopnagle and Bud" are listed over the WNAC wave just before the same period, your studio scribe would suspect more of their characteristic monkey business.

Meanwhile however, the original Chinatown setup is to be strictly as represented.

Regarding the aforementioned "Stoopnagle and Bud" fellows, they are the headliners in a brand new 45 minutes of "mike" variety slated for tonight. It's the 10 o'clock place (WNAC) and includes Everett Marshall, Frank Crumit and the Victor Young orchestra.

BUDDY AND BABE

Here's a red hot human interest yarn. Young George (Buddy) Babin of Vernon street, Somerville, is the Babe Ruth limerick contest winner this week and goes to the World's Fair in Chicago. George is 8 years old and happened to be backing out of his St. Ann's School yard to catch a fly ball on Wednesday afternoon when he was struck by an auto and injured. Hospital X-rays showed no fracture of the leg, so Buddy is now back home, learning about his first prize award upon arrival. Babe Ruth will definitely make the announcement and probably tell the accident story over (WBZ) at 8 45 this evening when he broadcasts. At least he will one evening next week. Buddy might best be on the safe side and listen tonight. As if he needs to have the suggestion!

Possibly because the news developments of late have been flavored with disappointing word on German debts, and uncertain estimates as to the strength of potential strikes in the steel districts, the sell off from early week highs is regarded with some misgivings in the financial district. We find ourselves unable to agree with those who would adopt a bearish attitude. Volume tends to dry up during periods of weakness, while many volatile issues disappear altogether.

While the suspension of interest on the Young and Dawes plan loans by Germany is a sad blow to American investors it is only in line with what America's other and supposedly more honorable debtors, have done. Those who long advocated that we forgive the war debts owed the government may find it necessary to do some tall explaining to investors who have been directly hit. After all they turned over their savings in good faith, hardly allowing for a day when Germany would imitate in part the example of her conquerors.

Hearst Stock Net in Year Well Over Its Requirements

[illegible] June 15—The exact results from operations in [illegible] Hearst Consolidated Publications, Inc., was revealed today [illegible] annual report of William [illegible] Hearst to over 43,000 in[illegible] his company.

[illegible] summary of 1933 cor[illegible] which accompanied the sixteenth quarterly dividend disbursement on the Class "A" [illegible] cent shares, shows a net [illegible] on the [illegible] issue of 2,000,000 preferred [illegible]. These earnings amount to [illegible] share in excess of the [illegible] dividend requirements.

"[illegible] believe the showing in 1933 [illegible] gratifying," Mr Hearst [illegible] out, "in view of the economic [illegible] which prevailed as a result [illegible] the national banking holiday, [illegible] failures, unemployment, business stagnation and [illegible] curtailment of earning and [illegible] power."

The complete text of Mr. Hearst's annual message to stockholders was:

HEARST CONSOLIDATED PUBLICATIONS, INC.:

The net profit of Hearst Consolidated Publications, Inc., for the year ending December 31, 1933, was $6,855,347, the equivalent of $3.43 per share on the entire authorized issue of 2,000,000 Class "A" 7 per cent Cumulative Preferred Shares.

Necessary for the payment of preferred dividend on the entire authorized 2,000,000 shares was $1.75 per share.

You will notice that the net profits exceeded this requirement by $1.68 per share.

Inasmuch as the entire 2,000,000 shares have not been issued, the net profits represent approximately three times the dividend requirement on the outstanding stock.

This corporation paid its preferred dividend promptly each dividend date, disbursing for this purpose a total of $1,936,966.

During the year 1933 the number of holders of Class "A" Stock increased to a total of 41,275, an increase during the year of 10,196 shareholders.

PROFITS AVERAGE $7,516,750

Throughout the four years of the depression Hearst Consolidated Publications, Inc., has had average net profits of $7,516,750.

I believe the showing in 1933 particularly gratifying in view of the economic chaos which prevailed as a result of the national banking holiday, thousands of bank failures, unemployment, business stagnation and general curtailment of earning and buying power.

At the time of my last annual report it seemed that the end of the depression was in sight and I pledged the stockholders that the management of the corporation would proceed along sane, sound and conservative lines as hitherto pursued.

The management has sought to keep step with such improvement as there has been in general conditions; it has undertaken and absorbed increased expenses incidental to national recovery.

SECURITY HAS FACED TEST

There can be no question that with the elapse of time sound changes in the economic structure of the country will be completed and the period of experimentation having elapsed there will be a return of confidence which will result in the development of industry.

I have purposely refrained at all times from optimistic prophecies because it has been our intention from the first offering of Hearst Consolidated Class "A" Stock to keep this security on a sound investment basis and to eliminate any speculative element.

I believe the record of Hearst Consolidated and of its subsidiaries has justified this policy and resulted to the benefit of its stockholders.

We believe the security has undergone the most severe tests during the last three and one-half years.

Again I desire to take this opportunity to express my appreciation to the many thousands of investors who have given us their confidence and to assure them that the corporation will be guided in the future exactly as it has been during the last three and one-half years.

LEADERS SEEN AS REGAINING CONFIDENCE

People Buying More Labor-Saving Appliances

By B. C. FORBES

This old world has more lives than the proverbial cat.

It has passed through plagues, famines, wars—and still it survives. I once lived in a foreign city visited by the deadly bubonic plague, saw men and women fall down on the street fatally stricken and witnessed many blocks purposely destroyed by fire. But today that city is flourishing as it never flourished before.

B. C. Forbes

This country has been afflicted by panic, depression, widespread unemployment, losses aggregating many billions; but it is still carrying on.

Yesterday I visited a well-known restaurant and found it crowded. The proprietor told me:

"Business has improved. We are doing better now than we have done at any time since 1929. People are spending money, which means that they must be again making money. I'm satisfied that everything is going to work out all right."

This is a resilient world. It can be depressed, crushed, badly dented, but, like a rubber ball, it bounces back again.

Heads of big organizations, men responsible for filling thousands of pay envelopes, may and do tell you with gloomy headshaking, that the country is rushing towards hopeless bankruptcy, inflation, repudiation.

But the reassuring fundamental fact is that people are buying. They are buying not only necessities, but refrigerators and other labor-saving appliances for the home, furnishings, automobiles, insurance. They are manifesting faith that the country is not at the brink of bankruptcy and ruin.

Resiliency, recuperative powers are also being exhibited by other nations. Economic recovery is almost universal.

This encourages many to believe that, regardless of what Washington may do or may not do, America will forge ahead.

True, there are citizens of means who are fearful that Washington is forcing the country along paths which can lead only to disaster.

They emphasize that the new deal in 15 months has called for the appropriation of some $17,000,000, that this will necessitate the levying of impossibly burdensome taxes, that even these abnormal distributions of tax-payers' funds have not imparted genuine vigor into business and employment, and that Washington is not acting in a way to inspire the business world with a spirit of confidence enterprise daring.

STOCKS HIGHER AT CLOSE OF TRADING

New York, June 15—Stocks were worked moderately higher in today's dealings on the New York Exchange.

The proposal of President Green of the A. F. L., presented to the Steel Workers' Convention at Pittsburgh, that a mediation board be appointed by the President to settle all disputes and that the threatened strike be called off, gave speculative sentiment a much needed lift.

Trade and industrial news was interpreted as rather constructive. Berlin's debt suspension edict was a disputed factor.

Grains provided no cue for equities. Wheat reacted after an early advance of around a cent a bushel and other cereals were barely steady.

Cotton did little and rubber and silver were barely even. Bonds of the prime categories held their ground and some of the German loans showed recovering tendencies. The mark improved, but other foreign exchanges were a little lower in terms of the dollar.

Overnight consideration of the German moratorium brought the conclusion in some quarters, that the principal repercussions would be felt in Europe, particularly in Switzerland and Holland, which are big creditors.

With Treasury securities, and various prime corporation issues, moving in to new high territory for the past year or longer, proponents of higher equity prices argued that funds must gradually resort to other investment and somewhat more speculative channels to obtain even half-way satisfactory returns.

The markets paid little or no attention to the news that all the countries owing war debts to the United States, with the lone exception of Finland, had formally defaulted. There had not been even a faint hope that some of the debtors might decide to pay something on account.

Stocks were inclined to work moderately higher in the first hour. The list was irregular at the start but turned upward near the end of the period. People's Gas and Johns Manville were 2 points higher. Bethlehem Steel was more than a point higher and U. S. Steel gained a fraction. Republic Iron & Steel gained a point.

Allied Chemical was a point higher. Air Reduction showed a fractional gain. Baltimore & Ohio and Montgomery Ward were moderately higher. Gains of minor importance were recorded by American Telephone, American Rolling Mill and American Water Works.

Sales to noon approximated 340,000 shares.

Price changes during the second hour were negligible and trading continued to idle.

California Packing advanced better than a point. DuPont was up well over a point. Howe Sound, Southern Pacific, Public Service of New Jersey, Union Carbide and Standard Brands were fractions to more than a point higher.

Schenley Distillers Corp. denies report that it is considering any new financing of any kind. No negotiations or discussions relating to new finances are being carried on with any banking group or with any other parties.

Sales to 11 a. m. approximated 220,000 shares.

Stocks showed gains of 1 to 3 points in the third hour with volume slackening near the finish of the period. Columbian Carbon and United Carbon were around 3 points higher. DuPont, Eastman Kodak and Johns Manville were 2 or more points higher.

Spiegel May Stern advanced 2 points. Gains of a point or more appeared in such issues as American Can, American Commercial Alcohol, Consolidated Gas, General Motors, U. S. Steel and American Telephone.

Sales to 1 p. m. approximated 530,000 shares.

Stocks accomplished little in the fourth hour.

Shares of National Lead, People's Gas, du Pont, Johns-Manville, Columbian Carbon and Union Carbide recorded gains of 2 to around 3 points.

Others up major fractions to a point or more included U. S. Steel, American Telephone, Republic and Bethlehem Steels, American Can, Chrysler, General Motors, Auburn, Montgomery Ward, Sears Roebuck, Standard Oils of California and New Jersey, Santa Fe, Northern Pacific, N. Y. Central, Western Union, Consolidated Gas, U. S. Rubber, Great Western Sugar, American Sugar Refining, U. S. Smelting, American Commercial Alcohol and Standard Brands.

Sales to 2 p. m. approximated 580,000 shares.

Baer as Murderous In Real Life As in Reel Life ↕ Outcome Different If Max Had Been In There With Tunney

By AUSTEN LAKE

New York, June 15.—What happened on the scaffold of the Long Island Bowl might have been a cinema sequel to the "Prize Fighter and the Lady" that movie vehicle which starred Max Baer as "Steve Morgan," the goofy glove fighter who cuddled the girls or knocked champions loose from their back molars with equal skill.

Austen Lake

Because Max Baer in true life proved just as daffy and just as murderous as his original celluloid character, even wearing the fawn-colored Hollywood nightgown with the letters "Steve Morgan" on the back into the ring, and performing all the schoolboy nonsense of the movie manuscript.

I am convinced that Baer is completely without nerves. He is so much cold mutton.

At the outset while Carnera waited, fussing and fuming in the ring Baer ambled down the aisle at a funeral pace pausing to hold receptions with ringside acquaintances and bobbing his spaghetti hair at the press rows.

How much of this affected Carnera is a question. Yet the fight was scarcely begun before the Italian Frankenstein was flat on his spine, rising to gallop away in a panic, his eyeballs popping and glaring toward his handlers for advice.

Against a shrewd, cool and competent boxer of the Tunney type, Baer would have paid for his nonchalance by a painful lacing. He never bothered to cover his chin and allowed the Italian to poke it at will with his left. And there were times when he sidewheeled away in a fluster of flogging, wide open to chance blows like any alley scrapper.

Carnera Choked by Own Terror

In fact, in his eagerness to make the kill as advertised, during the second round, he fell on top of Carnera three different times, sprawling in a tangle of arms and legs that would have done any of Paul Bowser's wrestling operas credit. But Primo was in a frenzy, with his eyes wide with fright, and he had no other thought than to escape.

I believe Carnera was as much choked by his own terror, while the bout developed, as he was damaged by the lacing his jaws and ribs received. He seemed to tip over with unnatural ease when Baer found his chin or stomach with a solid punch, and in the end he mumbled his willingness to concede the title and call quits.

I doubt that Carnera took enough punishment, or that he was sufficiently damaged to yield the ghost when he did. True, he groped blindly for the ring stanchions as he staggered off the platform toward his dressing room, but at the risk of being a spoilsport. I suspect the spirit was weaker than the flesh.

Referee Arthur Donovan said afterwards that he was not sure what Carnera was trying to say as he hung in that final clinch except that it was clear that the giant did not wish to go on. In a flash Donovan stepped in and waved Primo to his corner, leaving a somewhat bewildered Baer to grasp the fact that he had fallen heir to that championship fortune while the newsmen under the ring apron clamored to learn what had taken place.

Thus for the second time within modern heavyweight history, a champion gave up his title by word of mouth. And, strangely, the two have been the biggest men in the annals of the industry. The other was Willard, who refused to answer the bell at Toledo after being hammered to a bloody pulp by Jack Dempsey.

Only where Willard was badly bruised, Carnera bore no mark on his features or body, and only an inconsequential smear of blood under his nostrils.

Realm of Mussolini Dark with Gloom

There was one other mysterious happening in the tenth round, which for the moment nearly started a minor riot among Baer's handlers. As Carnera rose from being flattened by a Baer round house, Donovan stepped in between the fighters and waved Max back.

Perhaps at the moment he had some vague idea of halting the bout and awarding the fight to the Californian. For nearly half a minute the battle was halted while the principals argued back and forth. Finally, as Max's handlers came tumbling up the ladder, bawling as they climbed, Donovan motioned the men to resume.

It is probable that he had a momentary fluster since he leaned over the ropes later and explained that he thought the bell had rung. Yet the incident was viewed with suspicion by Carnera, who paused in the rest interval to snarl until his seconds finally dragged him away.

So today a movie legend has become crystallized into fact. "Steve Morgan," the goofy glove fighter who trains on rhumba dancing and frisky beverages, is the new champion of the world. The realm of Mussolini is dark with gloom, but the lamps of Broadway burn a midnight welcome.

PRIMO GAINED FRIENDS BY COURAGE

By Damon Runyon

New York, June 15—In a wild, crazy brawl that was a throwback to the time of the cavemen, Max Baer of California, became heavyweight champion of the world tonight.

Grinning and gabbling like a veritable madman and fighting with insane fury, the black-haired ex-butcher boy hammered the grotesque face and huge body of Primo Carnera, the Italian giant until the referee, Arthur Donovan, called a halt.

Never has anything like this battle been seen in the prize ring since the night Jack Dempsey went berserk against Luis Angel Firpo of the Argentine.

DOWN 10 TIMES

Down 10 times from the opening bell, his black trunks white with resin dust, his nose leaking great drops of blood, his lips puffed up, his vast torso red as if inflamed, Carnera stood with his great posts of legs apart to prop up his body as Donovan intervened, the giant's weird eyes rolling in his head.

His battered face took on an expression of puzzlement as Donovan motioned him to go to his corner and started pushing the victorious Baer the other way, through his swollen lips the Italian mumbled, "Why, Why?"

Meaning why did Donovan stop the fight. Yet Donovan said afterwards that Carnera was about to ask him to stop it when he took his action. Though how Donovan knew this is not altogether clear.

"He was muttering something," Donovan explained to the writer.

SHOWED RARE COURAGE

Carnera, down twice in the first, three times in the second, once in the third, twice in the tenth and twice in the 11th and last, was badly beaten, though this strange looking big man once a circus freak, gave a remarkable exhibition of courage.

Baer and his posse of seconds marched around the edge of the ring after the fight, Baer yelling derisively:

"I was in no condition. They ought have stopped the fight. Where's Brown?"

He meant Boxing Commissioner Bill Brown, who pronounced Baer a pugilistic bum before the battle as he was in no condition, and that the fight not only should be postponed, but called off altogether.

Thus one of the weirdest figures in all the strange history of fistiana passes, and there rose to the championship one of the most colorful and inexplicable characters that ever lived, an avowed 'good time Charley.'

'Twas Like Ax Murder in Ol' Shanty Town

By GENE FOWLER

Noted Author

New York, June 15—It is conceivable that the Pier A excitements and dressed beef rituals of the Baer-Carnera braw will arouse epic or homeric paeans by certain of our better ringside authors.

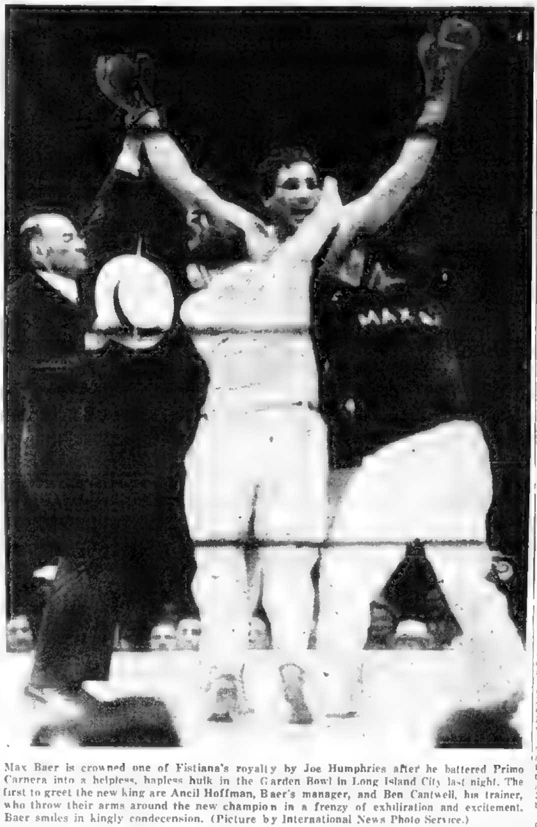
A minority report sometimes is hooted down and buried beneath a pyramid of foetide cucumbers and defunct brocoli. Nevertheless, I must record that last night's gruesome and daffy dance of the primitives struck a new low in the confines of the manly art.

After some thirty years of critical gazing at these fistic duets, these old eyes never before have witnessed such butchery of the professional standards. It was a Donnybrook, with fouls and demerits in almost every department. It looked like an axe-murder in Shanty town.

No matter how manly art was groined and breech-kicked, the customers went away with their money's worth of assault and battery.

Baer has a demonical belief in himself, an ego as big as that of a stock market Napoleon, and a sophomoric cake walk which will bring many thousands of persons to see him licked. I think he won't be licked for some time, not even by women.

The Coronation Scene



Max Baer is crowned one of Fistiana's royalty by Joe Humphries after he battered Primo Carnera into a helpless, hapless hulk in the Garden Bowl in Long Island City last night. The first to greet the new king are Ancil Hoffman, Baer's manager, and Ben Cantwell, his trainer, who throw their arms around the new champion in a frenzy of exhiliration and excitement. Baer smiles in kingly condecension. (Picture by International News Photo Service.)

Should Have Stopped Him in First---Max

By MAX BAER

(Copyright, 1934, Kings Features Syndicate)

New York, June 15—Bill Brown, the boxing commissioner, was right. It took me almost 11 full rounds to stop Primo Carnera. If I had been fit, like Bill said I should have been, I would have knocked out the biggest champion the world ever had in the first round.

As soon as I get through with some radio, theatrical and movie jobs, I am going to turn myself over to Bill and let him fix me up so I won't be a bum.

I always thought I could whip Carnera, and I proved it tonight. Even though I got very much the worst of it in the selection of referee.

We objected to Arthur Donovan because he kept yelling at me and annoying me all during my fight with Max Schmeling last year. One of the commissioners said we had a right to object to him, and he was against sending in Donovan.

But my friend, Bill Brown, and the other commissioner, Phelan voted against Colonel Wear, and they put Donovan in there tonight. And I'll say that if Donovan hadn't been refereeing tonight I might have flattened Carnera in the first round.

CARNERA GAME, SAYS MAX

When I sent the Canary Bird down and he climbed up and clinched, Donovan could have broken us so as to give me some solid shots at him, but Donovan wasn't doing much breaking then.

In the tenth I thought Donovan had stopped the fight. I put Primo on the ropes, and I was going in to blast away to polish him up when Donovan got in between us and shoved me back. I stopped punching, thinking he had stopped the fight.

After a while Donovan, following a protest from my manager, Ancil Hoffman, walked away, and then I heard the bell. I figured I had won the title then. So did some newspaper reporters. They shot out a bulletin that I was champion.

But Donovan, from another corner, said that the fight was still on—that the bell had saved the canary bird.

Primo is a dead game fellow—the gamest I have ever met. He took a fierce battering for eleven rounds, and, as often as I knocked him down, he got up. But in the eleventh just about all of the strength and the durability had been hammered out of him, and I might have sent him to a hospital if I had been forced to rip more punches into his head and body.

Primo shook me up just once.. that was in the eighth when he landed an uppercut. It had everything he had at the end of it, and I knew I did not have to worry any more about what would happen if he drove it home.

KNEW HE WOULD WIN

I fought in streaks . . . as I was told to do in my corner. Fight fast and hard one round, take it easy and coast along the next. Ancil told me to go out and win the title . . . and now I'm the champion.

I feel I could have won much sooner if I had gone tearing in with each round, but there wasn't any use in that. I knew I would win.

I like this idea of being champion. I think I'll keep it for ten years—and then will it to my nineteen year-old brother Buddy, so as to keep it in the family.

MOST BITTERLY DISAPPOINTED ---CARNERA

By Primo Carnera

Copyright, 1934, King's Feature Synd.,'Inc.

New York, June 15—What can I say but that Max Baer give me the most bitterly disappointing time of my life? He caught me cold in the very first round when I dropped my guard after he shot in a stiff body jolt. Down went my left and over went his very fast right to the head.

In all I was knocked down three times in the opening round but, while Baer's blows were terrific, my head remained fairly clear.

Those first round blows made me too anxious in the second. I kept pressing Baer too closely and again he knocked me off balance to the floor twice or was it three times? The third, I still remember, was not so bad for me as the first two, but it was bad enough with Baer moving away from me constantly, kidding and taunting me.

In the fourth, I thought Max was beginning to weaken, and, in spite of all the knockdowns, I still had hope of exhausting him. He was puffing and retreating, fighting only in rare spurts. But I was so eager that I kept my left too low and Max would smash my head, especially my nose, with hard rights.

In the sixth and seventh believe it or not, I seemed to be getting a second wind, but it was not until the eighth that I got in one smash to the head which all but topped the tiring American. I sensed he was giving in when he grabbed me, but he kept me off for the rest of the round.

Well, I put my whole soul into trying to connect with another such smash—one, I thought, which might make up for all those I took. But it was not to be.

I believe surely I could have lasted through the fifteen rounds but perhaps, after all, the referee was correct in stopping the show.

My congratulations to Max Baer and a Fascist salute to him as the new champion. Sometime I hope for another crack at the title. For the present, I am sad indeed.

Carnera Beaten Badly by Baer in Title Bout

He wound up the big sock around the waist line and let it breeze for Primo's chin. When it landed, Carnera crashed to the canvas.

Primo was confused each time he went down. He failed to take the benefit of the full count on a single occasion. At no time was Baer hurt. He took Carnera's Sunday punches and laughed at him.

Even as he battled his way to the championship Baer was still the great actor. He laughed and clowned as he drove right hand shots to the head and body. He got his greatest laugh as Carnera landed what he probably considered effective punches.

Baer several times struck his chin out for Carnera to hit at, and laughed when Primo scored with his club-like blows.

50,000 SEE CORONATION

The crowning of the new champion was witnessed by many notables. New York's Who's Who were numbered among the 50,000 who paid $400,000 to see the battle.

Baer lost the eighth round for hitting low. Otherwise he would have won this session easily.

Carnera had a slight margin in the fourth, seventh and ninth rounds only because Baer was trying to pick a spot for his famous right. It was only a question of what round Baer would win in after his opening rush.

The bout had not gone for much more than a minute when Baer found the range for his right to the jaw. Carnera crashed to the canvas. He was dazed when he got up. Another right to the head sent Carnera down again. Primo was a pitiful sight when he regained his feet. Baer stood off with a smile on his face. He knew he had his man, and didn't intend to hurry in putting over the finishing punch.

Carnera was still in a fog when he came out for the second round. Baer stepped in close and crashed a right to the jaw. As Primo started to fall he grabbed Baer and pulled him down with him.

The big fellows wrestled around on the canvas. When they got up Baer dropped Carnera with another right to the jaw. Once more Primo dragged Baer to the canvas with him.

There was some more wrestling on the canvas. Up on their feet again Baer drove a hard right to the jaw, and Carnera started to topple again. Primo grabbed Baer and pulled him down with him. Max laughed good naturedly when he regained his feet.

Carnera was much upset and did not seem to know where he was when the gong sounded for the end of the round.

Baer took things easy in the third session until he found an opening for his right to the jaw. He let the big sock breeze, and Carnera hit the canvas again. Primo was in bad shape once more and was fortunate to last out the round.

CARNERA WEAK IN 10TH

Carnera won the fourth round by a narrow margin chiefly because Baer held back as he tried to pick a spot for his right hand. The blows scored by Primo were light.

Baer punched his way out front in the fifth and sixth rounds. Carnera staggered under the power of Max's wallops to the body. Baer gave considerable attention to a right hand wallop under the heart. This blow slowed Carnera down to a walk.

Baer coasted along in the seventh beat, and Primo had the margin on points. Baer was strong, and was merely waiting to put over the finishing shot.

Baer subjected Carnera to a terrific hammering in the eighth round, but lost the round when Referee Donovan ruled he hit low.

Carnera did a bit better in the ninth round. This was merely because Baer was trying to find an opening for the finishing blow and left himself wide open for some feeble left jabs.

The tenth round was one of disaster for Carnera. Twice Baer hammered him to the canvas with rights to the jaw. The last time Carnera got up he was dazed and didn't know where he was. He looked out at the crowd.

Referee Donovan heard the bell for the end of the round as Baer got set for the finishing wallop. He hopped between the boxers, and halted the batting.

APPEALS TO REFEREE

There was considerable confusion as Baer's seconds had not heard the bell. Referee Donovan explained to them the round had ended.

Came the eleventh round with its dramatic ending. Baer swarmed all over the helpless Carnera and battered him to the canvas with a sweeping right hand drive.

Primo was in wretched condition when he regained his feet. He was bleeding badly from the nose, while he wobbled around. His feet had caved in, and he could not move around with any degree of security. Baer moved in swiftly, and sent a mighty right hand to the jaw. Carnera collapsed, and went to the canvas once more.

The giant struggled to his feet turned towards Referee Donovan. The referee hesitated to stop the contest as he felt Carnera had a champion's right to keep fighting until he was counted out. Primo knew he didn't have a chance, and appealed to Donovan to halt the contest.

Donovan stepped in quickly, sent Carnera to his corner, and declared Baer the winner.

After the bout Carnera stated he sprained his right ankle when he went down in the first round. It wouldn't have made the least bit of difference if Carnera had not suffered with this mishap.

Baer would have beaten him down anyway. No heavyweight can stand up in front of the Baer right hand and survive.

Tears of Joy

Denver, June 15—The mother of Max Baer heard the news that her "honey boy" had fought himself to the pinnacle of the fight world with an unrestrained outburst of tears—tears of joy and happiness.

She listened to the fight over the radio at the home of relatives she is visiting in this city. During the course of the battle she fought the fight with her son, advising, exclaiming, cajoling, soothing as the announcer shouted out his description of the fray.

Then, when it was all over, when the referee stepped in between, when the fight was awarded to her son, the tension broke. And in her happiest of moments—she cried.

COLLEGE CREWS TAPER OFF

Poughkeepsie, N. Y., June 15—An easy day with only a minimum of paddling on the waters of the Hudson was planned today as the 18 crews which are to take part in the annual Poughkeepsie regatta tomorrow afternoon tapered off previous to the major tests.

Cornell's jayvee shell made the only change on the eve of the classic. Jack Todd, No. 5 exchanged slides with Bob Greig, No. 3.

California Sick Man Gets Well Quickly

By Bill Corum

New York, June 15 The sick man of California got well with a bang.

His maroon red gloves crashing and roaring like an artillery barrage along the Marne, Max Baer, the Livermore assassin slashed his way past the ponderous bulk of Primo Carnera to the heavyweight championship of the world in the Garden Bowl Long Island.

The end, practically inevitable from the first round when Baer sent Primo thudding against the ring boards with a man-murdering right and had him looking for a gate in the ropes, came in the 11th with Primo still on his feet.

But he was a beaten champion, bloodied and through. To those around the ringside it looked as though he acknowledged this to referee Arthur Donovan, when he turned his smeared and pain distorted face and grunted an unintelligible word or two.

Watching his lips and in a position to see, it seemed to me that he said: "I can't go on." But in his dressing room Carnera vigorously denied this, and Donovan said he did not know exactly what the beaten man had said. He only knew he was beaten. More than 52,000 persons, who had paid $425,000 to sit in on the most savage, thrilling, primal battle since Dempsey and Firpo, knew it, too.

Baer was a Dempsey with curly hair. Baer was a curly wolf. A clown, eh? A sick man, eh? Well, he was a clown in whom there was no humor but only the curled lip sneer of the born killer.

What punches! What punches! Crash! Bong! Pow! No wonder the stricken Primo sometimes turned his back and ran away from that grinning devil, who spread his lips in a gargoyle grin, and said in action if not word.

"How do you like it, Big Boy?"

So Baer was sick and a bum, eh?

Well, if he was sick, I hope I never get well. And if he is a bum, as modern heavyweights go, I want to go see the bums fight all the time.

MENTAL HAZARD BEAT CARNERA —LEONARD

By Benny Leonard

Former Lightweight Champion of the World

New York, June 15—Max Baer was not the only one battling against Primo Carnera last night The biggest obstacle Carnera had to overcome, was a mental hazard which I knew he possessed for this fight

I visited Primo at Pompton Lakes the day before the contest. Billy Defoe, his trainer, and I went into a huddle in one of the rooms and we talked and planned the battle he was to fight I've often talked to Primo before a fight and so therefore I know just how he fights and what he can do—he seemed satisfied with himself and knowing that my ideas and his coincide he then started telling me that Dan Morgan was to be his chief adviser in the corner, the night of the fight

AFRAID OF "WORKS"

He said he never met Morgan and therefore had no confidence in him no matter how good he was as an adviser He looked worried then and talked about other things that could be done by the other side to rob him of his championship

Well, I sat there feeling sorry for the big fellow and for myself for picking him to win the day before

Then I tried to assure him that nothing like that could happen for the boxing commissioners were there to protect him and so you see under these conditions he fought and I believe the mental hazard got the best of him

You'd never know how thoughts of these kind rob one of their reserve energy, of their thinking power, and I am sure that Primo Carnera, the man mountain, was made into a meek midget through himself building these thoughts on his own mind until he entered the ring with Max Baer However I thought he would be himself again when the bell rang but Max kept talking to him and bullying him and he felt faint and stayed away

USED JUDGMENT

Nevertheless Max Baer fought a great fight He not only showed a good stiff overhand right punch but he used good judgment at all times in attacking Primo Carnera's body with a short right which he landed under the champion's heart that made the preem drop his hands and leave himself wide open

Like Hail on a Tin Roof

That's How Max Bounced on Primo

By Arthur "Bugs" Baer

(Copyright, 1934, by Universal Service, Inc.)

New York, June 15—When Maxie Baer jumped over the ropes at the finish of his victory, it reminded us that Jimmy McLarnin still owes the Bronx a somersault That's the way Jimmy used to prove he was in shape after knocking his opponent colder than a barber's scissors.

Maxie must have tossed in that little bit of hurdling for the benefit of Commissioner Bill Brown, who claimed Baer was in worse shape than a butterfly in the rain.

If Maxie's win was a technical victory, then that must be the same kind of decision a Chicago packer gets over Texas cattle.

Maxie punched the gallant Carnera silly, then threw him around like packages in the postoffice, and did everything but ride him for a bicycle.

Maxie fought when he felt like it. And he felt like it. He made the pace all the way and proved that while battles ar won on mats you cannot win fights with blueprints. They must be won in the ring

And that's about the story of the fight. Primo gave a remarkable exhibition of awkward courage but the sun-kissed maniac from the west kept bounding all over him like hail on a tin roof.

If the Baer man is a clown, we don't want any part of his circus.

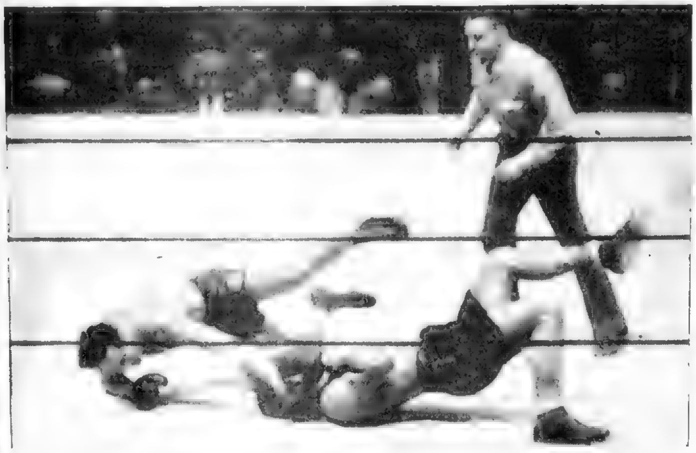
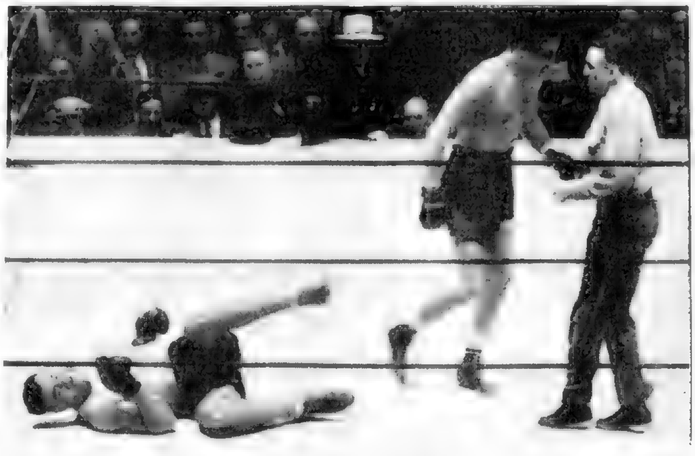
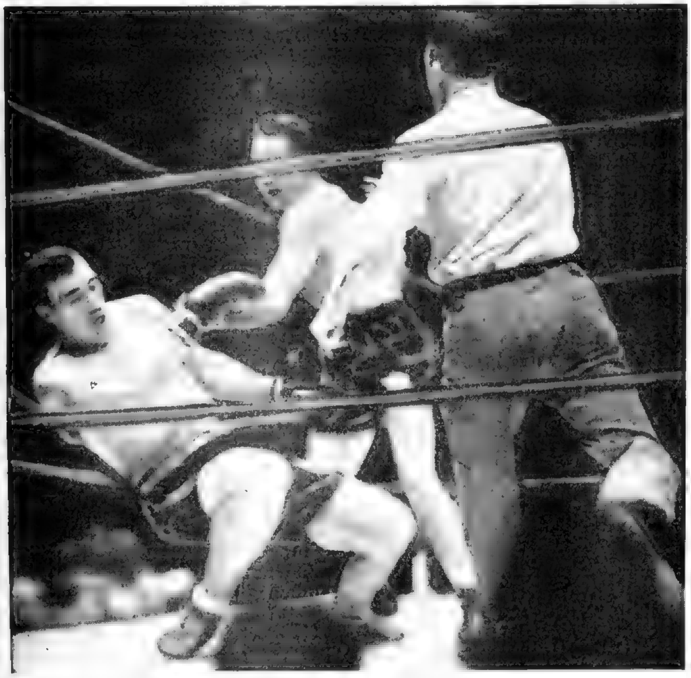
BELTING BAER BATTERS WAY INTO HEAVY THRONE ROOM



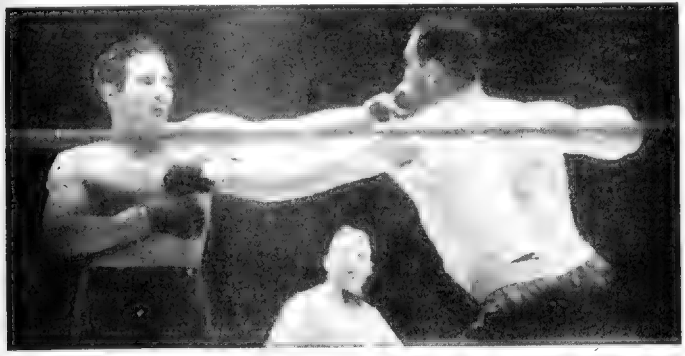
PRIMO CARNERA WENT DOWN in the second round, pulling Max Baer with him in his fall, and the knockdown sounded the beginning of the end for the mammoth Italian, the man who walked like a mountain and couldn't be hurt. But Baer did it. The Livermore Butcher handed Carnera the most decisive licking a heavyweight ever received in defense of his title. The new champion scored nine other knockdowns besides this one.



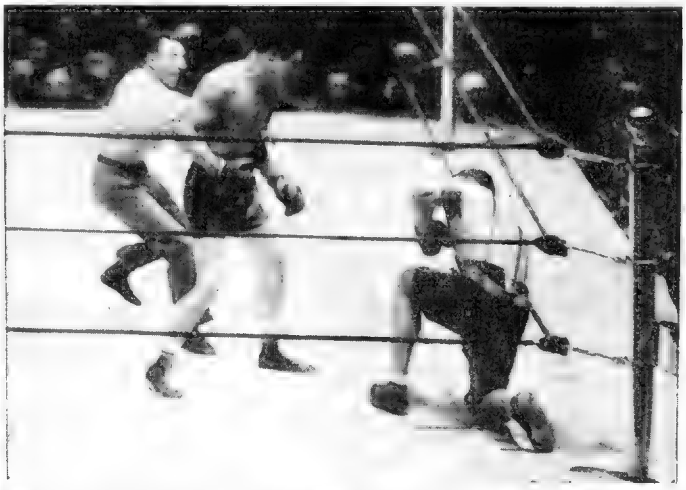
THE KNOCKDOWN IN THE ELEVENTH, just before the finish when Referee Arthur Donovan stepped in to stop the fight and make Baer the new champion. Primo's face looks devoid of expression as he struggles to lift himself to his feet. One of the greatest displays of ring courage was given the 50,000 by the man mountain as he comes off the floor nine times in his title battle. Primo was thoroughly beaten at the finish.



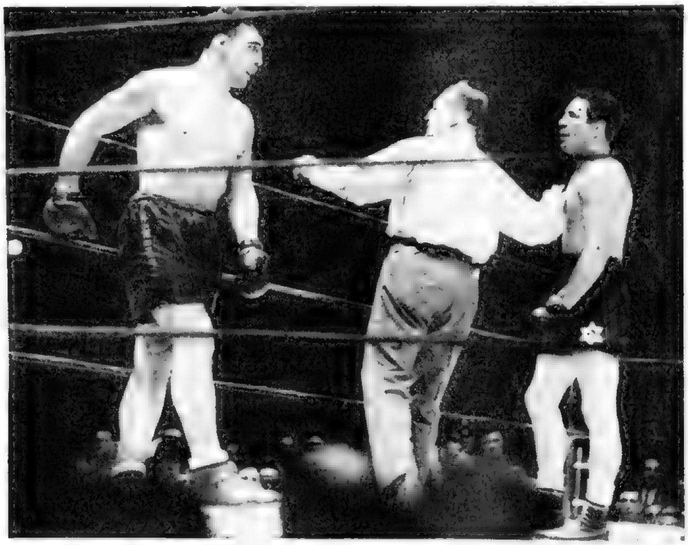
THE BEGINNING OF THE END. What a beginning it was. Primo Carnera went down twice in that first round in Long Island City, last night—then in quick succession he was knocked against the ropes on three different sides of the ring by the powerful right of his master, Max Baer. The giant Italian went to this position just before the gong sounded—and three minutes of the battle was over. It was a round of drops and spills.



FIRST BLOOD IN THE FIFTH. It came from nostril of the world champion, (who was up until last night) Primo Carnera. You see the battlers hard at it in the round where a bleeding nose was placed on exhibit by snap and aim of the battering right mauler of the new champion—Mr. Baer. What weight tossed punches in this glove classic. Baer just a mere 210 was doing his big job against a man who weighed in at 263¼. How he handled Primo.



PRIMO TAKES ADVANTAGE OF COUNT. This was in the final round—the round in which the referee, Arthur Donovan, thought the reigning champ had enough. Just a few seconds before the decision to stop the fight was made—this picture, showing Carnera resting, was shot. He was soon to have a long rest—the fight was halted—there was a new champion. Carnera had failed. What a night for a change of championships. What an ovation was given Baer of the movies.



THE END OF FISTIC GLORY for Primo Carnera and the beginning of the reign of a new heavyweight champion. The scene pictured above actually marked the end of last night's title exchange. It shows the referee, Arthur Donovan, as he stepped between the two battlers and ended the fight, giving the decision to Max Baer. The finish came in the 11th round, with Man Mountain Carnera cut to pieces by the savage attack of the challenger.

Mr. Boston Says:

Sharkey at Ringside First Time Since '29 He Hasn't Boxed There

By Jack Conway

Mr. Boston

New York, June 15—I met Joe Jacobs, manager of Max Schmeling, at the ringside at the Carnera-Baer bout. Joe told me Schmeling will box Walter Neusel in Germany next montn. Jacobs had a healthy bet on Baer.

JACK SHARKEY, accompanied by Mrs. Sharkey, Mrs. Johnny Buckley and Johnny Buckley, were at the ringside. It was the first time since 1929 that Sharkey hasn't been one of the principals in the big summer boxing show in New York.

CHARLES HARVEY was at ringside with Steve Hamas and Cornelius Griffin. The latter is the young man who knocked out Jim Maloney in Georgia.

HARVEY is anxious to show Griffin in Boston, where he should be a good card. Cornelius comes of Irish-Scotch stock, and can fight. He helped condition Carnera for his meeting with Baer.

MAYOR LA GUARDIA, accompanied by a regiment of policemen, was greeted wildly as he paraded to a ringside pew. The mayor has much color and real ability.

BILLY McCARNEY was around telling everybody how glad he was that he is no longer interested in the management of Max Schmeling. Billy and Max could not agree.

THE $2.20 seats were the first to fill. They contained 10,000 very happy customers. The original plans for the title bout did not provide for $2.20 seats, but they were later included in the program when the sale failed to get off to a hot start.

* * *

THE NUMEROUS conflicting stories from the rival camps knocked the bettors for a loop. Even the experts, who try to pick the winner, were in a daze before the bout. None of them felt very sure about their selections.

THERE WERE more cameras and moving picture men on the job than ever. Everybody now wants to see his boxing matches in pictures.

JACK DEMPSEY and Col. John Hammond of the New York Garden will hold another meeting tomorrow, in regard to the possibility of the former champion taking charge of boxing at the Garden. Dempsey isn't as keen over this job today as he was a month ago.

THERE WERE plenty of cheers for Dempsey as he arrived at the ringside with a party of friends. He is still the darling of the fight crowds.

DEMPSEY took a seat in the press row next to Jimmy McLarnin. The latter is virtually matched for a return bout with Barney Ross in September.

GENE TUNNEY looked at the heavyweight spectacle along with the rest of the former champions.

MAX BAER was a 6 to 5 favorite just before the men entered the ring. There was a late rush of Baer money.

DUSEK GETS 3D SHOT AT MAT THRONE

MAIN BOUT

ED DON GEORGE, champion, Java, N. Y., vs. ERNIE DUSEK, challenger, Omaha, Neb.

KARL POJELLO, New York, vs. JIM WALLIS, Holy Cross.

RED O'DELL, Schenectady, vs. BILLY BARTUSH, Chicago.

By Max Kase

Ernie Dusek, a rough, touch, ambitious gent who still clings to such success formulas as "if at first you don't succeed, try try again" will make his third try at Ew Don George and the heavyweight wrestling championship at the Garden tonight.

Twice before Dusek tried to gouge, rip, claw and push George off his throne only to be thwarted by force of circumstances. His failures, however, were tinged with such hints of possible success as to make tonight's meeting sufficiently intriguing and interesting to lure the local clients.

DUSEK NEAR WIN

In their first clash Dusek had the champion tottering and almost off the royal seat. But the referee stepped in and disqualified the bad, bad man of the West for unnecessary and unwarranted roughing. It was a welcome respite for the titleholder, closer to the brink of defeat than he had ever been before.

"Terrible Ernest" suffered a painful rib injury in their second meeting. The handicap was too much to give George, equipped as the champion is with physical advantages in weight, height and reach.

Because the occasion needs a favorite, the champion on past performances has been made a 6 to 5 choice. His two other stands against Dusek have made him sufficiently familiar with the Bad Man's unorthodox tactics to prepare an unorthodox defense.

DEGLANE IN ACTION

Henri DeGlane, former champion, meets Casey Kazanjian, a one time Stanford hammer thrower, in the semifinal but the real interest in the preliminary bouts will center in the effort of the cauliflowered Hans Steinke to throw not one or two but three men in the space of one hour.

The idea is not original but it is most commendable and should come in for some sort of wrestling distinction if the shopworn Hans can do what he sets out to accomplish.

He has picked a trio of active, alert performers for his stunt in Joe Malcewicz, the barefoot boy of wrestling, Nick Lutze and Everett Marshall. Either one of the three Steinke props is capable of forgetting the lines and spoiling Hans' ambitious performance.

Schmeling to Box Neusel in August

Hamburg, Ger., June 15 (AP)—Max Schmeling, former heavyweight boxing champion, and Walter Neusel today signed contracts to meet in August in what the promoters advertised as an elimination bout for the right to meet Champion Max Baer at Miami, Fla., in February. The site of the fight was not named.

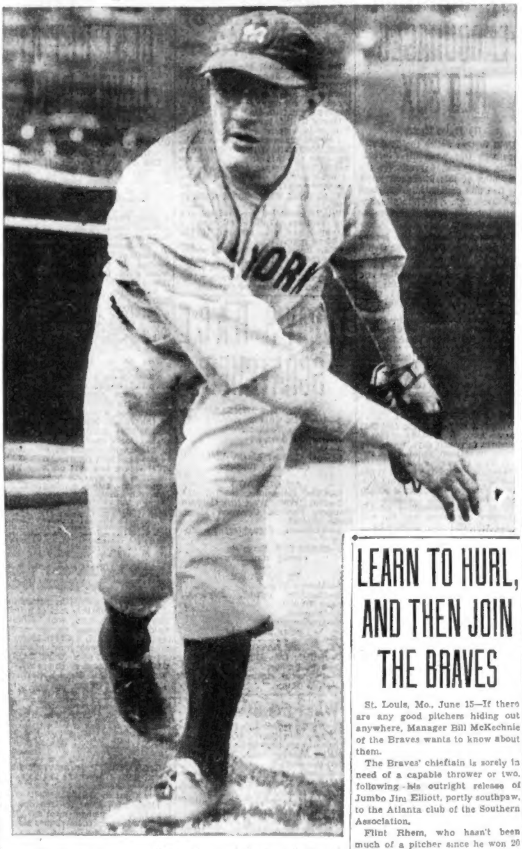
Campus Hero Majors in Majors



Johnny Broaca, Lawrence, Mass., boy and former pitcher at Yale, is proving to the Yankees the value of higher education as related to baseball. Johnny let the Brownies down with a single hit, while he fanned 10 to give the Yankees a shutout triumph. In his last start against the A's he yielded only three hits, but lost the decision. Four hits in two games—that's not good—it's close to being perfect. (Picture by Boston American Staff Photographer.)

BRISBANE AT FIGHT

fight." Both men go down together. They get up and both go down again. Baer makes it a point to laugh at the big Italian. Baer's effectively. Third of the fifteen rounds. Carnera goes down friends declare that Carnera pulled him down when they both went to the floor together. End of the second round.

Baer seems to hit harder, more again, up at once. Another round ends, the men in their corners are rubbed, massaged, gargle their throats.

The fourth round starts. Baer plays the part of scorn for his adversary admirably. Nothing done in that round, which now ends.

Baer has much the quicker mind, and needs it, for in spite of his six feet two and a half and his 210 pounds, he is small compared with Carnera, six feet six and a half, weight 263 pounds.

Sixth round starts. Baer walks to Carnera's corner and rubs Carnera's resin on his own shoes. Baer varies his sarcastic grinning by making most fearful faces at Carnera, as he rushes in to deliver his blows.

Carnera misses a perfect opportunity for a knockout blow, with Baer crouching, close to him. Baer shows remarkable capacity for taking Carnera's blows.

Thus far in the fight, according to the experts, Baer is the winner.

The eighth round has started. Baer seems a little tired, not at all discouraged, even after Carnera landed a heavy blow on the side of Baer's head.

Carnera, reaching for Baer, slipped and fell, looking much embarrassed. Baer laughed, neglecting an opportunity to do useful work for himself, as Carnera rose.

Ninth round begins. On points, Baer is still ahead, according to experts. Baer, good actor, waggles his head, pretending to be dizzy, then laughs. Strange creature, not very serious, considering his present occupation. End of ninth round.

Carnera is groggy, down, up, down again, getting up, down, up, goes to the wrong corner, as the bell rings and saves him for the moment.

Carnera down again, always rises instantly, instead of taking a count of eight or nine to recover. Carnera seems unable to hurt Baer, who now is ahead on points. Carnera rises from another knockdown and suddenly quits, saying, "I'm in bad shape."

The referee holds Baer's hand up in the air and yells "the new world's champion." Those that forced the odds to so sudden a change were apparently wise. Commissioner of Boxing Brown, who said Baer was in no condition to fight, was wrong.

The fighting is over. Carnera has left the ring, Baer stays to smile and do a few dance steps.

There will be some more fighting. The broadcasters beside the ring are yelling into their microphones, trying to make the fight more savage than it was, which is not easy.

"Again we ask aloud," to quote a poet who never saw a fight, "Why in the name of glory are they proud?"

Alexander the Great had the same thought, after he had taken the city of Miletus, once Greek, conquered by Persia, reconquered by Alexander. The citizens proudly showed the great conqueror many statues of great athletes of Miletus, winners of prizes in the Olympic games.

Alexander, turning away, asked coldly "where were those champions, when you passed under the yoke of the Persians?"

It is 11 standard time dark night, nice weather, cool breeze. Your narrator goes home, leaving two young gentlemen fighting a "semifinal." So far as the narrator is concerned, the rest is silence.

LEARN TO HURL, AND THEN JOIN THE BRAVES

St. Louis, Mo., June 15—If there are any good pitchers hiding out anywhere, Manager Bill McKechnie of the Braves wants to know about them.

The Braves' chieftain is sorely in need of a capable thrower or two, following his outright release of Jumbo Jim Elliott, portly southpaw, to the Atlanta club of the Southern Association.

Flint Rhem, who hasn't been much of a pitcher since he won 20 games for Rogers Hornsby's world champion Cardinals of 1926, was one of those who approached McKechnie for a job to fill the vacant post on the Braves' roster, which, by the way, has been pared to 19 players, or four below the player limit.

Rhem, released by the Cardinals a few days ago to Syracuse of the International league, has refused to join that club, threatening to retire to his home in South Carolina unless he is permitted to sign with another major league team.

Accordingly, President Sam Breadon of the Cardinals has granted him permission to try to make a deal for himself.

WHAT'S THE MATTER, BEN

Had they been given any kind of fair pitching yesterday, the Braves easily could have defeated the Red Birds. As it was, the Hub tossers made 18 hits to the Cardinals' 16, and took a 12-9 defeat behind the mediocre hill performances of Ben Cantwell and Mangum.

Cantwell lasted less than three innings, a four-run splurge by the Cards in the first inning, followed by homers by Frisch in the second and Delancy in the third, bringing Mangum into the slugfest.

Finally, the Braves got wise to Tex Carleton's pitching and all but batted him from the box, tying the score at 6-6 with a robust rally in the fourth inning.

Then came the deciding blow—a homer by Leo Durocher, Cardinal shortstop, with the bases filled in the fifth inning. Medwick had beaten out a hit and had moved up when Ripper Collins caught the Braves' outfield playing him in right field and dropped a double in left.

EVEN FRISCH ERRS

Orsatti was purposely passed to get Durocher, and the latter smashed a drive past Wallie Berger that rolled to the distant center field wall for a homer.

Two more ruens were added in the seventh, thus making a two run rally by the Braves in the ninth useless. However, the 1800 fans were treated to a few chills when cutfielder Rothrock dropped Lee's fly and Frisch messed up Spohrer's perfect double play ball.

Successive singles by Urbanski and McManus scored Lee and Spohrer and, with two men on base and two out, a homer would have tied the score. However, Baxter Jordan was unequal to the occasion, and he ended the game by forcing McManus at second base.

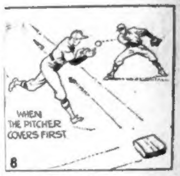
FIRST BASEMAN'S HARDEST PLAY



WHEN THE PITCHER COVERS FIRST

Most difficult play for first basemen comes on ground drives that are hit wide of the bag, and which force the pitcher to come over to make the putout. Green first sackers often hesitate a fatal split second, uncertain whether the ball can be handled comfortably by the second baseman. But smart first basemen try for any ball they can reach, placing the burden of covering the bag on the pitcher. In making the toss to the pitcher, try to get the ball in his hands several steps before he touches the bag, enabling him to concentrate on one thing at a time. Many such plays are messed because the ball reaches the pitcher at the same moment he is fumbling with his feet for the sack, causing him either to muff the ball or fail to touch the base, and often bringing about a collision with the base runner.

PALFREY, JACOBS VICTORIOUS AT WIMBLEDON

SARAH RALLIES TO WHIP MISS ROUNDS

By Associated Press

Wimbledon, Eng., June 15—Uncle Sam's tennis girls got off to a flying start today in their defense of the International Wightman Cup, Helen Jacobs, American champion and team captain, and Sarah Palfrey, of Brookline, Mass. registering victories in the first English rivals.

Miss Jacobs, the sturdy California star, made short shrift of Margaret (Peggy) Scriven, defeating the English girl in straight sets with the loss of but two games. The scores were 6—1, 6—1.

Miss Palfrey played some of the greatest tennis in her career in cutting down Dorothy Round, top-ranking British player, 6—3, 3—6, 8—6. The New England lass came from behind, trailing 5—6, to win three straight games and defeat Miss Round for America's first victory.

Triumph over Miss Scriven was especially sweet for Miss Jacobs. The American title-holder bowed to Miss Scriven in the finals of the French hard court championships, two weeks ago, after Miss Jacobs' protest against playing in darkness was refused by French officials.

Miss Jacobs was never called on to extend herself in overpowering Miss Scriven today.

RYAN IS OUT AS COLBY COACH

By Associated Press

Waterville, Me., June 15—Gilbert F. Loebs of Evansville, Ind., today was appointed associate professor and head of the new department of health and physical education at Colby College.

Failures to renew the contracts of track coach Mike Ryan and Athletic Director Harry Edwards was among the sweeping changes made by the trustees.

Coach Eddie C. Roundy was retained to take charge of football and baseball activities, while Ellsworth W. Millet will head the intercollegiate sports department.

The changes were the most drastic Colby athletic ranks has known. Ryan had been connected with the college for 13 years and Edwards for eight.

Loebs is now assistant professor in the schol of physical education and athletics at Penn State College. He is a graduate of Springfield College, obtained a B. S. degree from the University of Pittsburgh in 1925 and in 1930 received a degree of M. A. from Columbia University.

Kisses Fly Thick, Fast in Champ's Quarters

By Pat Robinson
International News Service Sports Writer

New York, June 15—"Give my regards to Hollywood, boys, and tell all the gals I'll be there."

Thus Max Baer, paraphrasing that other noted thespian, George M. Cohan, ten minutes after winning the heavyweight championship of the world.

With the sweat of battle still glistening on his body, with thousands of maniacs drunk with the lust of carnage fighting outside his dressing room, the curly headed champion's first thought was for the ladies and the films. He was even wearing the dressing gown he wore in his last picture.

COMBINATION MAN

A great fighter some of the time, but an actor first, last and all the time.

Let's open the door of the dressing room. Here he comes, a squadron of police mauling their way through a howling mob to get him into the room. He comes in smiling and immediately heads instinctively for the microphone awaiting him there.

Jack Dempsey is talking but hands over the "mike" to the cool, smiling and unruffled Californian. In a few well chosen words he reassures his mother in Denver, expresses his satisfaction over bringing the title back to America, compliments Dempsey, pays tribute to Carnera's gameness, advises the fans to listen in to his next broadcast—still the business man, you see—introduces his dad and then—

"For heaven's sake, will somebody bring me a beer. I want a beer. Here cut off these gloves. Look at that. Just one little strip of bandage. They (the Boxing Commission) thought they were hurting me by not giving me enough bandages but they were making Primo a sure bet to lose. My hands are sore, though.

SAVING KISSES

He grabs his Dad around the neck and kisses him, then stretches out on the rubbing table. His brother Bud reaches over and kisses him. He grabs Dempsey and kisses him, and the sports writers, looking dubious, begin to shy off.

"Don't worry, boys," Max joshes them. "No more kisses now until I meet the ladies. Where's that beer? Will somebody bring me a—what's that? Oh, sure I'll give him another fight. Fight anybody. He was a cinch." I hope my first million is just as easy."

He grins impishly. "Too bad I wasn't in condition, eh?" he winks. "Ask Commissioner Brown if I didn't look pretty good for a big bum?" (He was quoting the commissioner on that one).

"No, Primo never hurt me. I thought I was in one of those Hollywood clinches, though every time he dragged me to the floor with him. What a sucker he was for a right hand. Also a left, but, boy, can he take it!

"Why didn't I finish him the first three rounds? Well, say, you try punching a big sand bag as hard as you can for a minute and see how you're puffing. That's some job, and he's just as big and—he smiled happily—just as easy to hit. Say, I hit him with everything but the water-bucket, didn't I? And look at me, not a mark on me. Tell those fellows in the picture business that Mrs. Baer's little boy Maxie still looks pretty good for those films."

EX-CHAMP DEJECTED

So much for a champion. Thirty feet away in another dressing room sits an ex-champion. Gone are the hangers-on who patted him on the back and were proud to get a smile from him. The room is deserted except for Primo's normal sized brother who is crying, his trainer Billy Defoe, his manager, Louis Soresi, good time Charley Friedman and this writer.

The big fellow is still in a daze as Defoe cuts off the gloves. One side of his face is roughed as if a file had been scraped over it—mute testimony to the devastating power of Baer's right hand. His nose—never a thing of beauty—is now a smear and still oozing blood.

"No," he mumbles through thickened licks, "he didn't hurt me. Yeh, he punches heavy, not hard."

Soresi chimes in: "We want to fight him again. We'll come back."

Primo paws him aside. "Me, I'm not right. That throat (the doctors said he had pharyngitis) I no can get the breath. I am weak. No speed. I'm sick."

JOHNSON'S BAT ENCOURAGES RED SOX

By Dave Egan

Until further notice the Red Sox have won five consecutive series.

This, of course, depends on the happening of this afternoon when the Red Sox undoubtedly will beat the Detroit Tigers, 19-17, in pitchers battle between Fritz Ostermueller and Vic Sorrell.

Detroit was leading the league until yesterday, when young Johnny Broaca, the bespectacled Yale graduate, shut out the St. Louis Browns with great equanimity and a number of strike-outs, thus putting the Yankees in first place once more by the slimmest of margins.

They will be back again today, and though Signor Jacques Conway has his Magic Coin in New York your blushing envoy is feeling in such a lucky mood that he will state, without sham or pretense, that Der Fritzie Ostermueller, aided and abetted by eight companions, will be more than enough for the Tigers.

ROY IS HITTING AGAIN

This is said, despite the fact that hosses have stopped to graze in meadows in recent days, when they should have been running lickety-split for a five-dollar bill.

It is said despite the fact that the land-lady has a cold, menacing glitter in her eyes whenever a person barges in.

It is related regardless of bill collectors, constables, and the rest of their ilk. (Ed note: Colonel Egan is an ilk.)

Roy Johnson has started to hit again, and when Johnson is hitting, you will notice that the Red Sox are going places and doing notable things. Last year, he drove in more runs than any other Red Sox player.

This year, despite the presence of such swatters as Reynolds and Morgan, he probably will do the same thing, for Johnson is either there or directly thereabouts when there are men on bases and the shootin' commences.

BALLPLAYER'S BALLPLAYER

There is no harder loser in either league than the same Roy Johnson. Last year, when the Red Sox were floundering around with no ambition in life except to escape last place, and when game after game eluded them by a margin of one run, Roy would come back to the dressing room, sit in front of his locker, and stay there mumbling to himself until everybody had left, including the trainer.

That is why Marty McManus had such high regard for him as a ballplayer. And that is why, come what may, Roy Johnson will be a great outfielder for many years to come.

But, meanwhile, our side is going to beat the Tigers this afternoon, to win its fifth series in a row.

WALTERS GOES TO PHILLIES

A new Red Sox purchase was considered probable today with the sale of Bucky Walters, third baseman of the Fenway club, to the Philadelphia Nationals.

The sale was on a straight cash basis, and, while no price was announced, it w believed Walters had been disposed of at the $7,500 waiver price.

Walters' passing and the retirement of George Pipgras leaves the Sox roster at only twenty one, two below the league requirements. It is more than likely that Eddie Collins will seek to bolster weak spots in his club with new additions before long.

Walters had been benched when the Sox purchased Lyn Lary from the Yanks. Bucky Werber had been shifted to third.

Walters was a flashy fielder but was weak with the stick, hitting only .216 in the games he had played in this season.

"Poor Battle"—Brown

New York, June 15 (AP)—Bitel Brown, the boxing commissioner who pronounced Max Baer thoroughly unfit to fight Carnera and recommended a postponement, refused to alter his opinion after seeing the challenger win the heavyweight title.

"My opinion stands," Brown said. "Baer didn't show much but Carnera showed even less. Carnera was so weakened and befuddled by Baer's first round attack that he was unable to do anything effective or take advantage of the challenger's obvious weariness. It was a poor exhibition by two poorly trained men but if the public wants that kind of stuff, it's all right with me."

Baer's Second Saves Life of Coast Writer

By International News Service

New York, June 15 — Tragedy hovered over the ringside in the Garden Bowl as Max Baer battered Primo Carnera in their heavyweight title fight.

Harry Smith, lovable dean of the California writers, suddenly crumpled in his place at the press table. Ancil Hoffman, with all his anxiety over the winning of a heavyweight title, jumped over the heads of other scribes and landed beside his newspaper friend. He placed the smelling salts under Smith's nose.

Wildly he called for medical aid. Dr. William Walker climbed to the spot and administered to the stricken man.

"His heart was practically stopped. He would have died right there in harness had I not happened to have a hypodermic with me," said Walker afterwards.

ANNAPOLIS IS BEST BET AT CLYDE PARK

By Dave Wilson
(Selections Made for a Fast Track)
BEST BET—ANNAPOLIS

The lid will be pried off the New England racing season tomorrow when the Eastern Horse Show Club ushers in its three-day session at The Country Club, Brookline.

Mrs. T. H. Somerville's Annapolis, a star handicap horse of a few seasons back, is slated to go postward in the mile and one-sixteenth of the Metropolitan Driving Club. The son of the mighty Man O' War shapes up as the most probable winner of the day off past performances.

Annapolis, Banners Flying, Sir Gareth.

FIRST RACE—Metropolitan Driving Club, three-year-olds and upward; purse $500, about 1 1-16 miles: Spanson 133, Aughrim Boy 140, Mystro 140, Excelsior 140, Banners Flying 135, Annapolis 143, cHillwood 130, aSir Gareth 140, Black Sambo 140, Indian Message 135, cLarissa 125, Becteach 140.

cMrs. T. W. Durant entry, aPhilip Schwartz entry.

Those with a speculative frame of mind might do well to string along with ANNAPOLIS in this event. My scouts inform me that he drubbed a field similar to this at the recent Middleburg meeting. BANNERS FLYING has several good efforts over Maryland tracks to his credit and must be accorded the next best figures. SIR GARETH was a fair sort on New York tracks a few seasons back.

Pompeius, Iollan, Sable Muff.

SECOND RACE—The Myopia; three-year-olds and upward; purse $500; about 6 furlongs: Idolatry 145, cHillwood 142, aSable Muff 137, Brightest 149, cLarissa 137, Aughrim Boy 154, Galloping Duchess 149, Canana 137, eColigny 132, Chalice 149, Fast Chance 142, Unbelievable 149, Mysrto 154, Optimist 2d 154, aBrigade Rose 137, eIolan 160, Aquarius 142, Gay Time 147, Range Finder 160, Foray 154, Pompeius 164.

cMrs. T. W. Druant entry, aMrs. T. H. Somerville entry, eMiss Dorothy Neyhart. James Simpson Jr., entry, Philip Schwartz entry. xFive pounds additional for professional rider.

POMPEIUS should be turned out if he can't drub this sort of a field. The Pompey colt was winning stakes last season at the major tracks. IOLLAN, a clever performer at the various hunt meetings, should offer the contention. SABLE MUFF is reported to be speedy.

Battleship, Our Friend, Soldiers Fate

THIRD RACE—The 19th running of the National Hunt Club Handicap Steeplechase for Hunters; purse $1500; about 3 miles: Inception 167, Argonaute 2d 149, Our Friend 162, Outlaw 152, Drapeau 149, Laguna Secca 146, Sun Wrack 152, aTereus 163, aBattleship 170, Barney Mor 145, cSoldiers Fate 150, Arundel 155, Ghost Dancer 148, Lorenzo 145, Career 153.

aMrs. T. H. Somerville entry, cCampbell Weir-Lone Star Syndicate entry.

BATTLESHIP is heavenly burdened with 170 pounds in this race but nevertheless he shapes up best in my figures. OUR FRIEND won a lucky race from the top one at the recent Pimlico meeting. Off that performance, he shapes up as the most dangerous of the contenders. SOLDIERS FATE is a steady sort and he should have little trouble in handling the balance of the field. Inception is a money possibility.

Battleship, Cito, St. Francis

FOURTH RACE—The 15th running of the Chamberlet Memorial Steeplechase; four-year-olds and upward; purse $1500, about 2 miles: xxCito 146, Arundel 161, aNaylor 148, Passive 153, Optimist 2d 151, Redbridge 155, cBattleship 158, xxxHigh Kilted 145, Argonaute 2d 153, xxxFive O'Clock 145, Spar 158, cTeresa 151, aBagatelle 158, Luckite 155, xSt. Francis 153, Dartfourth 138.

BATTLESHIP appears to be better suited in this race than in the former. If reserved for this event he should have little trouble in reaching the winner's circle. CITO is reported to be in great form. My scouts tell me that he has been a frequent winner this season. ST FRANCIS, a double winner over this course at the last meeting, is fit and ready. All of his efforts his season have been good.

Four Daily, Wilson's Quota

An orchid, to paraphrase the much paraphrased Walter Winchell, to Dave Wilson, turf editor of the Boston American.

Wilson, handicapper par excellence, again demonstrated his handicapping ability by naming four of the six winners at Aqueduct yesterday, repeating a performance of Wednesday, when a quartet of " selections also flashed home in front at the Long Island oval payoff station.

Wilson's winners yesterday were Escapade, 4-5, in the second race, Jeanne S, 3 to 1, in the third, Oral, 7 to 5, in the fifth, and Mareve, 16 to 5, in the sixth. Angelic, his selection in the fourth race, finished second.

His selections are made doubly interesting at this time with the Rockingham opening only eight days off. Wilson's ratings and handicaps are a daily feature of the most complete racing news carried in this locality.

If you follow the fortunes of the thoroughbreds, you should not fail to get his choices daily in the Boston American.

Fallen Champion Alone in Trek Back to Hotel Room

New York, June 15 (INS)—Shortly after midnight this morning, with the yells of the crowd that saw him cut down by a man two-thirds his size still ringing in his ears, Primo Carnera stumbled back to his hotel—alone.

The Italian giant, shorn of his heavyweight championship title by Max Baer, broken-hearted in defeat, fled from the scene of disaster by himself.

It was not so much that he was left alone, but that he wanted to be alone. For the 263-pound mastodon of the ring, whose gigantic build houses a simple peasant's soul, had to give himself to tears.

And that he did—unmolested—through the dark hours of the night as America cheered its new champion and proceeded to forget the one that was gone.

The story of Carnera's sad homecoming was told today by Jack Downey, night manager of his hotel.

"It was a little after midnight," Downey said, "When I was surprised to see Carnera come in, all by himself.

"He looked a beaten man, and he limped as he walked through the door. He didn't say anything, but he pointed to his ankle. I could see it was badly swollen.

Speed Norfolk Prison Colony Completion

CHARLESTOWN STATE PRISON is crowded. The reasonable capacity is 814. There are now 927 inmates crowded within its gray walls.

Let's go forward with the completion of the Norfolk Prison Colony. Let's make extra, emergency appropriations for it.

Let's get the inmates out of Charlestown as quickly as possible and place them in the model prison colony, less injurious to their health and morale and more favorable to their redemption as worthwhile, useful citizens again.

Charlestown is a relic of barbarism in penal reform, and every penal expert in this country knows it.

Charlestown has been condemned as a death-trap.

It is insanitary and unhealthful.

You cannot expect to improve the spiritual health of men who can be reformed if you break down their physical health amid abominable conditions.

MEN do not improve in idleness. The Idle House was the cause of the riots, the fire and 333 deaths in the Columbus Penitentiary alone.

Men can improve in the sunshine, and in the open air where, for some part of the day at least, there is the opportunity to engage in some sort of constructive work that at least takes their minds off their plight.

Norfolk is intended to be the model prison colony of this Nation and of the world. It will become so, if properly managed.

It is a place where a man has some chance of reviving himself and of going out into the world, not a confirmed criminal, but to live among his neighbors in peace, respectful of law and order and of his obligations to his fellow-man.

We don't regenerate unfortunate men by cooping them up in overcrowded Charlestown.

Education Big Asset

"Now these four years the study lamp has burned;
"We've studied much, and played a little, too."

Throughout New England the class odes are being sung.

Young men and young women are leaving college, hopeful and optimistic, for their battle with the competitions of adult life.

Some will go into law, others the household arts. Engineering opens up to still others. We have a new crop of scientists, teachers, educators.

The majority, less fortunate, will find their first thrill and exaltation overcome by the cloud of actuality and despondency. There will be no profitable occupation open to them.

Let us speak a brief word of consolation and encouragement to this great majority who will find the avenues of profitable business and employment closed for the present.

Your education has not been in vain. You have learned to study, that is most important of all.

The country IS emerging from the depression which engulfed it. Men, long idle, are being taken back to work. Their turn comes first. They have women and children dependent upon them.

Your turn will come. America has emerged successfully from every economic crisis of the past, and it will from the present one.

Be patient, not depressed.

Be hopeful, not pessimistic.

You have obtained what other millions of young men and women envy.

You have a fundamental education that will stay with you through life.

Your parents have looked forward to this day. Many of them have slaved and denied themselves of necessities as well as luxuries. Do not disappoint them.

Be firm and brave, as they have been. If occupation is not readily available to you, study; continue your education.

The world is looking for new leaders.

Train yourself to be one of them.

Beavers in Bay State

The poet Thomas Hood in the early part of the nineteenth century wrote:

"And dear the Beaver is to him
As if it never made a dam."

Now comes Harry Sharpe of the little Bay State town of North Hancock. The beaver of 1934 is not dear to Mr. Sharpe, and the reason is that said beaver makes a dam.

The dam cuts off the natural milk cooling system Mr. Sharpe has long been using. A cold bubbling spring has provided the necessary refrigeration for Mr. Sharpe's milk supply until recently.

But the beaver, protected by law of the Commonwealth, has proceeded to dam the water, and allow Mr. Sharpe only a sun-warmed overflow. It would be illegal for a man to do what the beaver colony is protected in doing.

Lawyers say Mr. Sharpe may win a suit in equity against the beaver folks. Recalling that the legislature, over Governor Ely's veto, recently gave a western Massachusetts auto driver financial satisfaction for damages inflicted when his car collided with a deer.

Back to Fair Harvard

Ernest F. S. Hanfstaengl is on his way here from Germany to attend the twenty-fifth reunion of his Harvard class.

He was "Putzy" when last here, a popular student. Terms of endearment are rarely applied him now, since he is known as an intimate and confidante of Hitler.

Harvard students have been warned to abstain from demonstrations against him. They will suffer expulsion for overt acts.

Of course, the proper thing is to let Mr. Hanfstaengl severely alone, free to enjoy as best he may the deep affections which are aroused among men by reunion of students and the recollections of their classroom and campus days as boys together.

Old Hitching Posts

Everett citizens are lining up in opposed camps over a proposition to have the old hitching posts on Chelsea street removed. The proponents of the posts say they are valuable antiques, of solid Quincy granite with an iron ring in the top. Everett also has the more modern variety with an iron horse's head arched to receive the hitchrope. Alderman J. Arthur Burke has received complaints that citizens on dark nights have walked into the antique hitching posts, stubbing toes.

Defenders of the posts that recall old Dobbin days retort that this situation calls for better lighting rather than removal of the posts. Opposed to the old hitching posts are some who say they are now only leaning points for modern "hitch hikers."

Listen, World! -:- -:- By Elsie Robinson

HAVE OUR MAIDENS BECOME MOLLS?

"Gun Molls"—fascinating, aren't they, in a shuddery sort of way? Bizarre creatures out of another world!

But are they, any longer, so bizarre? And is it "another world?"

Elsie Robinson

Mrs. Belloc Lowndes says they aren't, and it isn't. Mrs. Lowndes recently startled complacent Americans by announcing that she was "convinced that there are thousands of young women who would unhesitatingly COMMIT MURDER but for their fear of being found out, if by so doing they could secure the kind of exciting life which seems to be the only existence they think worth leading."

"Thousands of young women!" But what kind of young women? Gun-molls? Gutter-gals? Weaklings and neurotics?

Not at all, says Mrs. Lowndes. To the contrary, they're the smart, snappy, "average" young women, often from the "best" homes, who set the pace for our modern life. Anything but the criminal type! Such girls as you dance with any Saturday night; swim, play tennis, bridge or golf and flirt continually. Such girls as you all too frequently marry!

But does she mean to say that these charming young creatures would actually DARE to murder "for a good time?" She certainly does! "They'd not only dare—but they do. And are actually admired for doing so! Why? Because all the barriers which used to surround girls have completely broken down. A woman can be as reckless now as she wishes. Public opinion admires a woman who dares!"

Horrid remarks? But they hadn't been quoted an hour before mail sacks were bulging with approval! And Exhibits A! From soured cynics? No! From sensible citizens who say it's all true!

From Portland and St. Louis, Chicago and Fort Worth, New York and San Francisco the letters are piling in, applauding Mrs. Lowndes, asking what we all are going to do about it.

Here, from Los Angeles, comes a red hot protest from the P. T. A., mother of two sons. And—believe it or not—at least a million puzzled parents will vouch that the contents are Spot News.

"I've had to order the telephone taken out to try and protect the youngest boy against these pleasure-mad girls. He's a freshman in college, and the phone was ringing night and day. He didn't have a chance to study, and naturally didn't want to, with some girl always on the other end of the line, ready with her car to 'go places and do things.'

"Stopping a boy's allowance does no good. The girls are quite willing to pay all the expenses. And it's just the same whether it's some rich man's daughter or a working girl.

"From little high school youngsters to bachelor girls with apartments—they're all perfectly brazen about pursuing men. I've seen them sit outside our place in their cars honking for the boy, with the gin all provided for the party! And I could duplicate the story in fifty families in our circle.

"I tell you, our girls are becoming gangster molls!"

And then she proceeds to slam the blame right down where she thinks it belongs — ON THE GADDING MOTHERS OF THESE GANGSTER GIRLS.

"If the mothers weren't pleasure-mad themselves . . . if they'd spend less time loafing and smoking in hotel lobbies trying to start an affair, ogling orchestra leaders, guzzling at cocktail parties, and more time in their homes looking after their daughters—our papers wouldn't be filled with these horrors.

"But these idiot mothers think it's actually amusing when their darlings start a scandal, because it gives them a chance to get into the spotlight, too!"

OUR MAIDENS BECOMING MOLLS! Not so nice when you see it said in cold print, is it? Very thrilling to see some cute little Two-Gun Gertie on the silver screen. Awfully amusing to hear about some smart little scallywag running away with her dad's car, joyriding at 80 miles an hour down Broadway in her undies, wisecracking the cop when he told her "Naughty! Naughty!" But calling them "molls"? Saying they'll "murder"!

No—you can't believe it! I don't blame you. I don't want to either. But—

Marry-Go-Round -:- -:- By Helen Rowland

MOST ATTRACTIVE AGE

Somebody is always trying to decide at what age a woman is most attractive. But a man is supposed to be interesting at ALL ages.

Helen Rowland

And he is—but not to ALL women. Miss Mary Garden finds no man interesting until he is around fifty—all the way around! And Miss Sheilah Graham (youthful writer) thinks that all men in their twenties are boring. She would like to set the deadline at thirty.

Oh, well, by a violent stretch of memory I can recall the time when I thought any man over twenty-five just a dull, old fossil. And at "thirty," he was tottering toward the grave! Proving that there are lots of things besides beauty, which are all "in the eye of the beholder."

Young eyes can't find anything "interesting" under hair that is beginning to thin out at the temples and to grow gray above the ears. But more mature eyes perceive nothing but the "great open spaces" under a shock of football hair. The violin age thinks the saxophone age pretty raucous and crude, and the saxophone age finds the violin age pretty slow and insipid.

The girl who waited on the front stoop for the boy who murmured "A jug of wine, a loaf of bread and THOU!" would hardly appreciate the poetic flights of the young Lothario who sings "You're the cream in my coffee and the mustard on my sandwich!"

In short, a man is most interesting to you when he speaks your language, sings your songs and dances your step!

Still, there is an age at which the average man and the average woman are most attractive and most interesting because they are in the flowering time of life, the High Noon of Youth. And that time is the Golden Thirties!

The Golden Thirties—when a woman's mind is ripe and her heart and sympathy are mellow, yet her charms have not begun to fade.

When a man's mentality is working on all cylinders, but his youthful egotism has been deflated and some of his nerve extracted.

When a woman is sophisticated and poised—but not yet disillusioned.

When a man still has all his enthusiasms—but has parted with his youthful cockiness and swaggering.

When a woman has found herself, and serenity sits upon her brow—but the light of adventure in her eyes is as bright as ever.

When a man has discovered that love is not ALL sex, but something finer and tenderer and more lasting; and a woman has discovered that love is not "just a game"—but life's carbureter! When we have stopped posing—and begun understanding!

Flaming Youth is too self-conscious—too busy trying to set the world on fire to be "interesting." And this "life-begins-at-forty" stuff is just the bunk. Life begins in the cradle—and ends when your last enthusiasm dies out. But it is brightest and fairest and most INTERESTING at High Noon!

THE LIVERY STABLE HACK

We thought it galloped right along, we thought the old time hack
The last known thing in elegance. A coachman dressed in black,
A high silk hat upon his head, to drive us through the town
Was something to be proud of, for the people, up and down,
Who saw us going homeward thus to dodge a passing shower
All knew that it was costing me two dollars for the hour.

When I was courting Nellie, now and then I'd feel the urge
To show my deep devotion by a little extra splurge.
Although I was short of money, I believed it worth my while
To let her neighbors see that I could take her out in style.
And oh how proud we were to ride within that carriage black—
Two dollars for the outward trip, and two to take us back.

A carriage and a spanking team, a coachman and a whip!
Two dollars for the hour, it cost; a quarter for a tip.
These youthful lovers of today in motor cars don't know
That there is more to life than speed—and we were not so slow.
The coachman kept his eyes ahead; I'm sure he knew right well
'Twas no concern of his if I should steal a kiss from Nell.

But now they dash in motor cars and think that speed's the thing,
That horses are intended to parade a circus ring,
And if they want to spoon a bit, as all young people do,
They have to stop the car and stay right out in open view.
But knowing what I know today, could long lost joys come back,
I'd like to call for Nellie in a livery stable hack.

Stars and Stripes

One saloon advertises "pro-war stuff. Two drinks may make you want to start the Great Conflict all over again.

Uncle Sam is short 61,000,000 bushels of wheat, which, at a dollar a bushel, amounts to quite a lot of chicken-feed.

Union leaders sarcastically insinuate that Gen. Johnson never knew what it meant to work in a steel mill. Say, the Gen. hasn't been near anything as cool as a blast furnace since he became head of the NRA.

NOT MUCH ELSE TO SEE

"Did you see Mussolini?" Mrs. James A. Farley was asked when she returned from abroad the other day.

"Oh, yes," she replied. "We saw lots of him."

Human Side of the News; Kid McCoy With Ford

By Edwin C. Hill

A visitor to one of Henry Ford's model farms out in the Ford domain adjacent to Detroit came upon a gray-haired man pottering about in fresh soil. There was something oddly familiar about the face of the gray-haired man, something familiar, even, about his carriage, the way he moved about.

And presently recognition flashed upon the visitor and he knew that the gray-haired man was one who had been a hobo, a counter-jumper, jeweler, hotel clerk, cabaret owner, Wall Street broker, soldier in the world war, vaudeville actor, and, at the height of his singular career, one of the finest heavyweight boxers who ever tied on a glove—Norman Selby, once of Logansport, Indiana, and much better known as Kid McCoy.

The Kid is sixty-two and has been working for Henry Ford ever since he was released from San Quentin Prison in California, where he had served eight years for manslaughter, the crime having been the killing of his eighth wife.

He works mostly on the Ford model farms and does a bit of physical instructing on the side. And even at sixty-two the Kid can toss an agile glove and step one or two fast rounds.

DETECTIVE AIDS McCOY

It was an ex-boxer and old admirer of Kid McCoy, Harry Bennett, chief of the Ford detectives, who gave the Kid the job when he came out of prison, and there he works now, contentedly, it would seem.

Life has its curious ups and downs and its strange twists of fate, and the career of Norman Selby is certainly a case in point. He was sentenced to serve twenty-four years for killing his sweetheart in a quarrel. But always as cunning as a fox, he made a spotless prison record. It took him fifty-nine years and cost him at least a million dollars to learn that even a fox can't beat the law. So he turned lamb and won his freedom.

I have known the Kid a long time, as champion boxer, soldier, motion picture actor in Hollywood and a man of many marriages. He never looked like a professional fighter. He used to be slim, smiling and smartly dressed, and roughnecks sometimes made serious errors concerning him.

Three tough-looking customers spotted him one day as he came out of a gymnasium all done up in his fancy clothes, including spats and a cane. One of the three stuck out an ugly jab.

"Pipe the sissy," he mocked. McCoy stopped dead. "Just repeat that remark," said the Kid gently. "You heard me," growled the tough, "and I'm going to give you a spanking!"

Five minutets later when all three had picked themselves up from the sidewalk, rubbing their swollen jaws, one of them said to a highly interested newsboy:

"Say, what happened to us, anyway?" The newsie grinned.

"You guys just made a little mistake," said the youngster. "You picked on a fella that knocked out the champeen the other night."

WON BY CUNNING

Sheer cunning won a lot of fights for the Kid. At the Old Coney Island Athletic Club, in his first fight with Maher, "The Irsh Champion," McCoy kept Maher waiting on hour in the ring—in a great barn of a place as cold as Greenland. When McCoy finally showed up, Maher was so stiff with cold that he could scarcely bend his fingers. And McCoy very promptly knocked him out.

Some years later the celebrated Joe Humphrys matched Maher and the Kid for another fight. McCoy knew his best days had departed, so he went to Maher.

"Peter," he said, "I'm sorry about that affair at Coney Island. Let's let bygones be gygones. This bout of ours is for charity, and there's no sense in our pounding the daylights out of each other. Let's just give 'em a first class exhibition wth no hard feelings." Peter pulled his long mustache doubtfully. "All right, Kid," he agreed, "But no finaigelin' this time—mind ye, now, no finaigelin'."

Through the first few minutes of sparring the foxy McCoy kept talking.

"Now, Peter," he said, "don't hit too hard. You might cut loose and knock me senseless."

Maher grinned and nodded in his good-natured Irish way.

And then, just before the bell rang, the tricky Kid cut loose with a swing that started back near the entrance of the park and landed flush on Maher's jaw. Old Peter tried to work back to his feet, but he couldn't make the grade. And all the time he kept moaning:

"It's a mortal sin! Oh, it's a dirty crime. The deceitful spalpeen! The double-crossin' blackguard!"

They had to carry him out once more as McCoy made himself extremely scarce.

Big Navy Plan Key to Italian Safety, Says Mussolini

By James T. Williams, Jr.

Italy will lay down the keels this year of two giant capital ships of 35,000 tons each, according to an official announcement from Rome.

President Roosevelt has good reason to be gratified by this decision. It is notice to the world that Premier Mussolini shares the belief of President Roosevelt that the capital ship is more effective and more economical for certain nations than the smaller type.

ROOSEVELT SHOWED WAY

One of the first decisions declared by Mr. Roosevelt after he entered the White House was in favor of the development of naval air force and in favor of the maintenance of our naval strength in capital ships. This decision squared with the unanimous opinion of the general board of the navy over a long period of years.

What President Roosevelt was quick to see was that because the British navy finds a smaller type of capital ship better suited to its defense plans than the larger type, some Americans had jumped to the conclusion that this country should imitate the British navy, instead of adhering to traditional American policy of building a navy equal to the strongest in every class of combatant ship of the type best suited to American defense.

President Coolidge well understood this fact. The delegation which he sent to the Geneva conference of 1927 was headed by a statesman of the navy who well understood this fact—Admiral Hilary P. Jones. And never was the American case more ably presented at any conference in modern times than this delegation presented it. It was because President Coolidge refused to surrender the right of the United States, within limitations agreed upon at the Washington conference, to build the type of ships which this country requires instead of the type of ship which the British require, that the Geneva conference failed to force an American surrender.

POWER THE GREAT NEED

"The vital necessity in our ships," as Admiral Jones has explained, "is 'power of survival.' This means not only ability to reach, operate in and return from, distant areas, in possibly wounded condition, but also the ability to give and take punishment with a fair chance against the preponderant numbers that may be brought into action by an enemy from his nearby bases or home port.

"Power of survival demands certain major characteristics that must be incorporated into a ship if it is to fulfill its proper function. The finished ship is a compromise of all the weights assigned to each characteristic so that its aggregate weight or standard tonnage shall not exceed the maximum allowed for its particular category. The weights assigned to battery, machinery, armor, fuel, etc., must be so co-ordinated that each will give maximum efficiency without prejudice to the others.

"The indispensable elements of power or survival in a ship are: offensive power, defensive power, adius of action, speed and habitability.

"Each of these should be the maximum possible without undue sacrifice of any of the others, having due regard to the strategetical and tactical functions of each category of vessel."

In deciding to build two 35,000 ton capital ships, the Italian government is following the line of reasoning that has long determined American naval policy. In a 35,000 ton ship, which is the maximum tonnage allowed under the Washington treaty, it is possible, due to the width of beam, to have five skins between the outer water and the vitals of the ship, with efficient spacing between skins. With so many watertight skins the ship is the better fortified to sustain the explosion of torpedoes or airplane bombs against the underwater body.

LARGEST SHIP NEEDED

Italy, like the United States and unlike Great Britain, has few naval bases. Italy therefore requires as the backbone of her fleet the largest type of capital ship. Premier Mussolini knows what President Roosevelt knows, what Admiral Jones and the general board of the navy have long contended, that when you reduce the size of a capital ship you reduce its power of survival.

This is why the larger type is so necessary for the United States and Italy and not so necessary for nations like Great Britain "possessing well located bases or home ports close to the areas of operation."

The announcement from Rome may well remind the American people how fortunate they are in having in the White House today a President who knows all about the navy.
